REMEDIES FOR RED SPIDER.

The Gardeners' Magazine, London, gives the following formulæ for red spider:

As mixtures for spraying: (1) Boil six ounces of black soap in one quart of water for fifteen minutes, then add four ounces of white soap in powder, and boil for fifteen minutes. Next pour a quart of paraffin into a pail, add the above, and stir thoroughly. This "stock" might be allowed to stand for a day or two, being stirred or churned every now and then until a thick buttery mass has resulted. For use dilute with water according to the strength of the plants to be treated, thus: One part of the stock to ten parts of water for strong plants, one to fifteen for not so strong plants, and one to thirty-five for tender plants. It is safer to syringe afterwards with cold water.

(2) A mixture of infusion of quassia chips and tobacco juice is also fairly satisfactory, but whatever spraying mixture is used—and a good douching with soap and water is often satisfactory—care must be taken that the application is thorough, and that the under sides of the leaves are not neglected.

Sulphur mixed with water, so that it can be painted on the hot water pipes, is often used in conservatories. In this use of sulphur care must be taken to maintain a proper moisture in the greenhouse. Apart from the danger of this treatment, if the atmosphere be dry, one of the great causes of the prevalence and multiplication of red spider is overheating and over-dryness. Where "forcing" has to be done, and the temperature is therefore high, attention must be paid to keeping a moist atmosphere.

A PARK MAN'S VIEW.

Theodore Wirth, of the park department of Hartford, Conn., in his report of trade conditions as state vice-president of the S. A. F., writes as follows:

"The cultivation of the taste for flowers and decorations has become universal. It most decidedly has, and I am bold enough to state that the tendency of the public in that direction is greatly due to the influence exercised on same through the floral displays in up-to-date public parks and private grounds, and claim that but a small percentage of the commercial florists of to-day, both growers and dealers, are prepared to take advantage of the demand stimulated and created through same to their benefit. I do not say that the floral decorations in our public parks and progressive private grounds here are better than elsewhere, but I know that our local commercial florists are not up to the demand, which those displays create among the public.

"Hundreds of visitors to our parks want to know where they can procure that or the other plant, all easily grown and adapted to our climate, and when they are given the addresses of our florists they come back and say that those florists don't grow them and don't know them.

"Out of 200 different varieties of bedding plants used in the making up of flower beds, borders, old-fashioned gardens, etc., used in up-to-date places of horticultural interest, florists are not able to supply, as a rule, more than twenty to thirty varieties and those often only in stock of olden times, run out through propagation from year to year; the same old story, over and over again.

"If the local florists would aim to keep step with the times by growing such novelties as are proven to be meritorious introductions and which the public want, they would to their own advantage secure their home trade in place of forcing same into the hands of the unscrupulous, swindling, fake drummers, that go around the country collecting good money for false, worthless goods. The demand for ornamental plants for the decoration of home grounds, for summer and the year around, is growing in the same proportion as are all other industries in this glorious country. It calls for the breaking and cultivating of thousands of acres of ground, and the employment of hundreds of industrious hands, and the young members of our craft should look out to produce at home all that can be produced to fill the demand of the home trade. It can be done and should be done."

RETURNING CONDENSATION.

We have four houses, 32x157, attached, with solid beds, steam pipes 1-inch and 1¼-inch on the side walls. Then at right angles and overlapping one end are three houses 20x111. At a little distance is another house and still further on two more detached houses of the same dimensions, and on a line with the rest. The boiler shed is in the right angle where the two ranges overlap. The boiler is underground but I want to raise it to the ground level and add another to it. At present the water is trapped back but it does not return satisfactorily from the farthest houses, although there are six feet drop in 300 feet. The flow is 2½-inch and the return 1½-inch, with pet cocks on all pipes. What is the matter with the return? How would you locate the boilers? S. J. P.

The present location for the boilers is probably as good as any. Wherever possible to place boilers low enough below returns to secure the return of the water by gravity, the working of the system will be more satisfactory. If the boilers must be placed above ground, the condensation can be drawn from the pipes into a hot well and returned to the boilers by means of a small steam pump driven by a small boiler carrying fifty or sixty pounds pressure. The exhaust steam from this pump can be utilized for heating a small house or potting shed and the condensed water allowed to waste, as it would not be permissible to discharge it into the general heating system on account of the oil from the pump. If a pump is undesirable, the water can be returned to the boilers by means of traps, but they are more or less unreliable. The failure of the water to return from the detached houses is due, partially at least, to the friction of steam and water in the long lines of pipe. Increase the size of the pipes, grading the pipes carefully to avoid pockets, also avoid the use of check valves, and the water will return more freely. L. C. C.

Sedalia, Mo.—Gelven & Son have engaged Charles Duerr, formerly in business near Chicago, to take charge of their growing department.

BALTIMORE.

Business continues to improve, but we still hear some complaints. The growers are mostly ahead of last year in the amount of production and the increase in supply is more than the increase in demand; therefore, with better business, we still have a greater surplus on the whole than the corresponding time last year.

A wind and rain storm approaching a cyclone visited this section last Wednesday and did much damage to outdoor stock. Maman Cochet roses were done up baldly, but they seem to have revived and again they are coming in quantity and of good quality. This rose is largely depended on here for the summer months. It could well be dispensed with now, as good stock of most all kinds is being cut from the houses. Maids, Gates, Kaiserins, Meteors, Cardinals and Brides go at $3 to $4 per 100 for best stock, shorts at $2 per 100. Cochets bring $1.50 to $2.50 per 100, Perles $2 to $3. Carnations, outside, 60 cents to $1 per 100; inside carnations, 75 cents to $1.25.

C. Akehurst & Son are sending in some fine Flora Hill and Genevieve Lord.

Dahlias were damaged somewhat by the recent storm, but are all right again. The better varieties move fairly well. Asters are about over, J. E. Bartell being about the only one to hold out this late. He still has a fine patch which are readily sold on arrival at the Exchange.

Mac Richmond, late foreman for Halliday Bros., has accepted a position in the Agricultural Department at Washington. Before leaving he was tendered a banquet by his friends and members of the Gardeners' Club, at which time he was presented with a fine carving set, also a handsome gold watch from his late employers. Mr. Richmond has the well wishes of the entire craft. A. F.

Centralia, Ill.—A. W. Webster is remodeling his greenhouse and putting in an ornamental tile street front.

Galesburg, Ill.—E. R. Gesler, of Gesler & Drury, has gone to Pecos Valley, New Mexico, to look up the prospect of running a nursery business. Mr. Gesler suffers from rose fever and expects to permanently locate in the valley. H. F. Drury will continue the business here. This firm has 42,000 square feet of glass and has one of the best equipped plants in the state.

South Bend, Ind., April 4, 1904.
"Superior to any Hot Water Boiler we have ever used. You certainly have placed the right name to your Boilers; no effort at all to keep the temperature at desired points when zero weather comes. Night after night the past severe winter weather gave your Boiler a good test. We are more than pleased with the Superior Boiler." Yours truly, Treanor & Rettic.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Freshly Imported Azaleas.

Last week I had something to say about azaleas that had been summered over. The new importations will soon be arriving. They are almost all grown in beds in the open ground in Europe and, what with their wonderful preparation of soil and splendid care, they arrive here with large clumps of roots, larger than we can conveniently get into a proper size of pot and look well. For instance, a plant with a head fifteen inches in diameter would look overpotted in anything larger than a 7-inch, but you can, with a big, sharp knife or hatchet, reduce the ball of roots considerably without doing any harm to the plant and you can do this with all sizes, so that they will go into pots that will be in suitable proportion to the plant.

Frequently the ball of roots will be found quite dry when the case is opened, although we must admit they are always excellently packed, whether they are dry or not. After you have trimmed the roots, dip the ball in a tub of water for a few seconds or until it is thoroughly wet through. Then pot firmly. As there is little room between the ball of roots and the side of the pot, there is a good excuse to use a blunt stick to firm the new soil.

A light loam for one half and the other half leaf-mold is as good a compost as you can give these finely rooted plants. If you use any manure, let it be thoroughly decayed. I have seen azaleas root very finely into well rotted refuse hops, but they will do very little rooting, whatever you give them, for some months. Put them in a cool house and syringe occasionally for the first week or two.

Moving Herbaceous Plants.

The coming two or three weeks is an excellent time to transplant almost all our well-known herbaceous plants. As is often remarked, you can only get at an herbaceous border at the time of planting except with a top dressing, and therefore it cannot be too deeply dug or too heavily manured.

The herbaceous plants that are profitable to a commercial florist as cut flowers are very limited, but there is an ever increasing demand for them by our customers, particularly that class who have summer cottages on the lake or river shore or at the thousand and one summer retreats where our people of means very sensibly nowadays prefer to spend their summers.

All herbaceous plants, even if as hardy as a peony, should be protected with leaves, stable litter or evergreen boughs after winter sets in. They are not established and, if they were, we rob them of their natural protection, their own withered foliage and the leaves of the forest where, or near the margins of woods, most of them are native.

Easter Lilies.

The Bermuda bulbs that were received in July have come along nicely, developing less disease than formerly, but still they are not of that uniform quality we used to get a dozen years ago. As soon as they made a growth of a few inches in the cold frame they were removed to the houses in batches and by this time all are growing and on the road to flowering. The fact that these early forced bulbs spread their flowering time from the end of November until the end of January is no disadvantage to the grower, who only forces a thousand or two, for you want these indispensable blooms every day.

There is nothing to do from now on but give them a night temperature of 60 to 65 degrees and keep them free of their chief enemy, the common green aphis. When once the buds are visible the fly is easily kept down by fumigating, or, better still, by the slow-burning tobacco dust, which spreads plenty of nicotine through the house without the deleterious effects of dense, hot smoke which arises from burning tobacco stems. By the way, having used this method of burning the dust in two pie dishes in a rose range all last winter, we noticed not the slightest injury to the roses, while without a doubt the dense smoke from stems does injure the opening buds.

Some growers still depend on the Bermuda bulbs for Easter. Remember this great florists' day is very late next spring and the plants intended for Easter can remain in a cold frame for another six or seven weeks, but protected from heavy rains or hard frost.

The Japanese bulbs are again late in arriving. Perhaps the Marquis Oyama has most of the gardeners on the west of the Yalo. It is generally understood that the principal object in forcing the Japanese bulbs is to get them well rooted before bringing into the house. Therefore a cold frame is the place for them until at least the first of December, unless we get such an early and severe winter as the last. We have never found any trouble in getting the Japanese lilies into flower, even when Easter came in the first days of April. The coming spring you have three weeks more. Get them well rooted before any forcing is done and then they will endure and thrive in a good brisk heat. As you will have plenty of room on the benches by the time these lilies need bringing indoors, put them at once into the pot in which they are to flower.

Deciduous Trees and Shrubs.

After the first hard frost, or if that does not come, by the middle of October, the time has then arrived for planting deciduous trees and shrubs. Early spring may be the surest time, but we know how short that season often is. You need not wait for the dropping of the leaves. Pull them off. I don't recall any shrub that is really hardy in our northern states but what can be transplanted in the fall. If it is a great, big, overgrown shrub and in digging has lost most of its working roots, it may not survive and would not at any season.

The great majority of shrubs should not be over two to three feet high when planted for your customer. They will want something bigger, but your eloquence should convince them that it's better in every way to start with a small, compact shrub. If such are planted then you can defer any pruning until spring. They are pretty sure to be quite a little winter-killed and will need pruning then, whether killed back or not.

There are a few exceptions to fall planting and better left until spring. Among them are the althæas, the African tamarix and the Prunus Pissardi and, with us, most decidedly the hybrid perpetual roses, whether budded or on their own roots. This may not be good advice for those south of Philadelphia, but north of that the H. P. rose is only just hardy and runs an excellent chance of being killed root and branch if planted in the fall. I always say: "You had better defer planting the roses until spring. They will be no show or pleasure to you this winter and I may as well take the risk of losing them." That advice is always followed and the writer is no more a philanthropist than the rest of you.

You will be asked to plant some hedges this fall. Two shrubs you can plant with safety. They are Berberis Thunbergii and the English privet. In fact, the former you can plant, it seems, any day in the year that you can get a spade into the ground. The English privet is absolutely hardy in our most northern states. The California privet was cut to the ground all over the north last winter and cannot be recommended with safety, fast growing and beautiful though it is. WILLIAM SCOTT.

RED ANTS.

Can you advise us as to what we can use to exterminate the common red ant?
T. S. C.

We have never seen ants in the violet house where we used the hydrocyanic acid gas to kill the brown aphis. You may be afraid to use it, but if used according to formula published in the pages of the REVIEW last winter, it is harmless to any plant. Briefly it is this: One pint of water, one pint sulphuric acid and two and one-half ounces of cyanide of potassium (a deadly poison) and leave the ventilators shut all night. The above quantities are for every 2,000 cubic feet of air space in your house.

Granulated sugar with enough Paris green to only very slightly color the sugar is also used to give ants their last supper. Put it on chips and remove when you water or syringe. This is also a good mixture to destroy sow bugs. W. S.

ASTERS AND GLADIOLI.

I would like to know when to sow asters and gladioli for early spring inside flowering and what varieties of same to use. L. F. W.

For asters that are to be grown on benches under glass sow early in February. In the writer's opinion there is not much profit in asters under glass, except for a very early crop. They can, with plenty of water, be grown just as fine outdoors and under glass in July and August it is hard work to keep the thrips off them. For several seasons it has been the late asters that paid. In August they are a drug. By the end of September they are fought over.

Of course L. F. W. meant plant gladioli, not sow them. There is not much gained by planting them on the benches before the middle of January because they won't start. W. S.

CARNATIONS

DISEASED PLANTS WANTED.

Ed. Review: Will you kindly insert in your carnation notes the fact that Prof. Hasselbring, Department of Botany, University of Chicago, Chicago, Ill., will be glad to have diseased carnation plants mailed to his address to enable him to study same for his paper which he will read before the American Carnation Society in January.

Jas. Hartshorne.

CARNATION NOTES.—EAST.

Various Diseases.

That most dreaded disease, stem-rot, was discussed last week but there are other ailments which, while not necessarily fatal, are of sufficient importance to demand attention, as they are a hindrance to the best development of the plant. If we are to bring out the capabilities of a variety and desire to propagate for another season, the healthier the plants, the greater the degree of success.

Rust is a disease which may crop out on almost any part of the plant but generally shows first on the lower leaves. When this affection first made its appearance in this country, much alarm was felt and many so-called remedies were tried but none has proved either a preventive or a cure. Unlike stem-rot, when a plant becomes affected, it is not beyond help but can be so handled as to eventually be a source of profit.

Rust being a constitutional disease makes it imperative that it be so treated. Local treatment is a help in preventing a spread of the disease but to reach the seat of trouble, the vigor of the plant must be brought to such a degree as to throw off or outgrow the disease.

Local treatment consists in removing all affected parts and burning them, afterwards dusting with grape dust and spraying with Bordeaux mixture or salt solution to destroy the many mites clinging to the foliage, awaiting a chance to enter.

These mites and germs of other diseases find an easy means of entrance in the punctures made by aphides and other insect enemies; hence the added importance of keeping the plants free from insect pests.

No effort should be spared to keep the plants growing vigorously. This may mean the addition of fertilizer, if the soil is partly exhausted or deficient in some element. Many times the addition of air-slaked lime is all that is needed to render the elements more available. The working in of the lime also lightens up the surface soil and admits air.

Extreme care should be used in watering and spraying, that the bluish bloom on the foliage may not be removed.

Other diseases to be commonly met are bacteriosis, common spot, fairy ring spot and fusarium leaf spot. Although different in nature, the effect of each is similar in appearance of affected foliage but, not being constitutional diseases, they are more easily overcome or guarded against.

The same treatment as recommended for rust, particularly the encouragement of vigorous growth, is advisable. The removal of affected leaves is important in all diseases. The work may be laborious but it is obvious that to leave this objectionable matter, teaming with fungous spores, to decay on the plants or soil, is only to invite further recurrence of the trouble. Geo. S. Osborn.

RUST.

What is the cause and cure of rust on carnations? J. V. L.

Not many years ago carnation growers dreaded the carnation rust even more than they did stem-rot, and under the prevailing methods of culture it was something to be dreaded. If a variety was disseminated which was known to have rust, it was sure to have a short career. We have learned to avoid it now, however, and we do not dread it as we used to. If a new variety has the earmarks of a good commercial sort, we would not think of letting a few spores of rust stand between us and the variety.

The one thing to bear in mind is that these spores will remain dormant as long as they are dry. That will tell you to diminish your syringing to just what is absolutely necessary to keep away red spider. Syringe only on bright days and then do it early in the day, so the plants will dry off before night. Do all you can to help the plants to make a strong, sturdy growth, so they will be able to fight off the disease. Do not allow any checks to occur at any time. In case of a damp, rainy spell, you can blow some air-slaked lime with a little sulphur mixed with it (about one-quarter its bulk) over the plants, just like you would on roses to stop mildew. If you have steam heat drop a pinch of sulphur on one of the pipes about every ten feet once each week. Don't make this too strong, though, else it will take the color out of the blooms, especially the pink ones. It is a good plan to have the ventilators open an inch or so, anyway

A. F. J. Baur.

FUNGICIDE FOR RUST.

Please let me know some good fungicide with which to spray carnations for rust, and how often? L. F. W.

I think it is agreed among expert carnation growers that fungicides or solutions of any kind had little to do with the almost total disappearance of rust. Bordeaux mixture was for years the supposed standard remedy. Other growers later have believed that salt and water was very efficacious. Perhaps it is, but the best antidote of all is the proper condition of the atmosphere and soil, and that I must leave to Mr. Baur or Mr. Osborn. By cleanliness, plenty of pure, fresh air and no spraying of the foliage after the first few days of planting, we have seen little if any rust for the last five or six years.

CHRYSANTHEMUMS

FIRING AND VENTILATION.

Frost has occurred in many sections and some attention is necessary to keep the temperature from falling too low in the houses. The air should be reduced in the evenings and when the indications are for frost leave on only an inch or two of air and run a little heat through the house. Growers heating with steam have a big advantage in the early fall as a single line of heat turned on, while it will not raise the temperature to any appreciable extent, will still furnish enough live heat to keep a moving atmosphere in the house. If one has only 4-inch hot water pipes it will take more firing to produce the desired result and the additional heat may necessitate leaving more air on the house. A night temperature of 45° to 50° is plenty warm enough and if there are no early crown buds in the house it may go even lower without any detriment. Where only late flowers are wanted, and terminal buds are setting, the houses should be kept very cold and any temperature short of actual frost will be quite safe; in fact, the only way to hold back flowers is late planting, taking the terminal bud and a temperature as low as possible.

The early kinds that are fast developing will, I think, have a good sale this year, owing to the severe frost that has already visited a good part of the country. Last year asters, dahlias and such like plants were still in their glory through a good part of October, but this year, in my section at least, they are already cut down. A few years ago the early kinds were a valuable asset and we have got $5 per dozen wholesale for Merry Monarch that were not really worth half that sum. But for the past three years the early kinds did not pay because, with all the outside stock still in flower, there was no call for them to fill a breach. This year, by the anxious inquiries as to when flowers will be ready for shipping, it looks as though the man who still had faith in the early varieties will meet with his reward.

October Sunshine and the white and pink Pacific should be about ready to cut in a week. One of the novelties, Merstham Yellow, is also showing indications of being a fine early kind. From a bud taken the first week in August it is developing a very fine flower that will be ready to cut by October 8. It is a very fine yellow, much on the lines of October Sunshine but a dwarfer grower and much finer flower. Later buds are just showing color and look equally as good as the earlier ones. Coombes, Alice Byron, Robinson, Halliday and several others are showing color, and it is now but a short time before the season will be on in full swing.

Growth is very fine throughout the country generally this year, particularly of the newer kinds, and I look for big exhibits and strong competition at all the big shows in the east and the present indications are that the commercial grower will make more money on his mums than he has for years past, and more particularly on the kinds flowering in October. BRIAN BORU.

CHRYSANTHEMUM SOCIETY.

President Herrington has announced the committees to examine seedlings and sports on dates as follows: October 8, 15, 22 and 29, November 5, 12, 19 and 26, 1904. Exhibits to receive attention from the committees must in all cases be prepaid to destination and the entry fee of $2 should be forwarded to the secretary not later than Tuesday of the week preceding examination. The committees are as follows:

New York: Eugene Dailledouze, chairman; C. H. Totty, Wm. Plumb. Send exhibits care of New York Cut Flower Co., Sixth avenue and Twenty-sixth street.

Philadelphia: A. B. Cartledge, chairman; John Westcott, Wm. K. Harris. Send exhibits to 1514 Chestnut street.

Boston: E. A. Wood, chairman; Wm. Nicholson, James Wheeler. Send exhibits to Boston Flower Market, care of John Walsh.

Cincinnati: R. Witterstaetter, chairman; James Allen, Wm. Jackson. Send exhibits to Jabez Elliott Flower Market, care of janitor.

Chicago: James S. Wilson, chairman; Edwin Kanst, third announced later. Send exhibits care of J. B. Deamud, 51 Wabash avenue.

The executive committee of the C. S. A. has decided to use the new scales prepared by the committee appointed for this purpose at the convention in New York. These scales are to come up for discussion and final adoption at the convention in Boston, November 3, 1904. The use of the scales by the committees previous to that time will give them a try-out and help to discover faults, if any are to be found. The scales are as follows:

HARDY CHRYSANTHEMUMS.

I send a piece of a plant of a hardy chrysanthemum and would like to know what the trouble is with it.

H. & C.

The branch of chrysanthemum sent is covered with a growth of cuscuta (dodder) one of the worst of weeds on account of its parasitical character, its long twining stems climbing over other plants and drawing the life or sap for its own nourishment. It is not particular but will take hold of almost any species of plant and if not disturbed, the plants will finally perish.

RICHARD VINCENT, JR.

SPLENDID HYDRANGEAS.

Everyone knows that beautiful shrub, Hydrangea paniculata grandiflora, but everyone does not have an opportunity to see such a specimen as can be seen in Jamestown, N. Y. There must be something in the soil of Jamestown that accounts for this, because the specimen illustrated, although perhaps the best we noticed, is by no means unusual. Grand specimens adorn the lawns of many residences of this picturesque city. The gentleman standing by the side of the bush is not on exhibition. He is one of the department managers of the mammoth Lake View Rose Gardens, by name Alex. J. Scott. His height (six feet) and width (unknown) will give you a better idea of the size of this bush than figures. Yet in the latter days of July we saw and roughly measured the height and spread of this beautiful shrub. It is about eleven feet high and fifteen or sixteen feet in width and perfect on all sides.

If you, reader, can grow hydrangeas like this one, what more beautiful object do you want? We can't grow them in Buffalo, or we don't. This shrub should never be mixed up with other shrubbery. A large bed or group of them has a fine effect and can be given special treatment.

But if your soil will grow them as does Jamestown, then a single specimen is grand enough.

I think why we so often see this hydrangea stunted or straggling is that we simply starve it, both for food and water. All the hydrangeas, as their name implies, are heavy drinkers and the soil, unless naturally rich and on gravel, should be liberally supplied with manure at planting time and every spring a heavy mulch spread around the surface. One other point. Every spring prune back all last year's growth to three or four eyes. As they had 30° below zero in Jamestown last winter, this Japanese shrub or dwarf tree is not very tender and then, again, you may say its blooming season extends from the end of July until winter snows give it a sheltering blanket of the "beautiful."

DECORATIVE SCHEMES.

Pillar Decorations.

Among the separate architectural features that form a part of a floral decoration as a whole are mantels, mirrors, staircases, doorways, chandeliers, arches, pillars, windows, walls and ceilings. While a decoration as a whole should be connected and uniform, it is much easier, both for illustrative and descriptive purposes, to treat each feature separately. The illustration for today is a small detail of a wedding decoration, the mantel and mirror portion of which were presented in the Review some time last year and treated under the subject of "Drapery Studies." This pillar was some distance in front of a mantel in front of which the bridal party stood.

As is easily seen, the only decoration attempted for the pillar is a smilax garland, the main part of which consisted of three strings of smilax separated at the heavy ends so as to make the garland nearly uniform in thickness. In short, we have one long string of smilax equal in length to three ordinary strings. Fasten with tiny wire wrappings easily concealed among the foliage. At the point where the first two strings come together attach the heavy end of a third string for a side garland, and a little lower down attach a second branch garland. Fasten the upper end of the main garland to the middle of a wire long enough to encircle the top of the pillar two or three times. Wrap and tie the wire tight enough to hold the garland around the pillar, but not tight enough to scratch its finish. One ought to be careful of these wire ends. In most cases they should be gotten out of sight, but here it is best to let them project outward from the pillar, as being so high up as to be out of sight and harmless.

Start the main garland downward as is shown on the right side of the accompanying illustration. When more than one-third of the way down, direct in a curve across the front of the pillar, thence back around the opposite side to a point immediately under the first turn; then let the end of the garland fall to the floor easily toward the left. Of course the garland will hold itself in place to the last point from which it falls to the floor. Attach here one end of a piece of No. 36 wire about a foot long; wrap in under the foliage. Carry the wire straight across the pillar to the left until it strikes a point on the lower branch garland as it hangs. Attach it at the most convenient point and fasten the wire. Cover this last wire with a little spray of smilax. Train the upper branch garland similarly on the other side of the pillar, and the whole web will hang together of itself. Here and there on the main garland pull out a delicate spray and catch it somewhere around the pillar. Let the most of this be done toward the upper part. Occasionally allow a loose spray to fall where it will.

Smilax on a Pillar.

It will be noted that the top of the garland is started below the capital. This is usually the most ornamental part of the pillar, where the design shows much of the architect's skill. Do not cover this up. Let the temporary decorations rather catch the idea of the architect and carry out the lines of design instead of proceeding independently. The draperies to the right, left and back of the column in this illustration are the connecting lines of the rest of the decoration, and do not belong to the pillar design especially.

Where the heavy part of the decoration is at the bottom of the pillar and becomes lighter as the top is reached, good use can be made of galax. Braid the stems of galax leaves in a single strand, having the leaves touch, base to tip. Fasten the tip end of the garland around the base of the pillar in the same way as the smilax garland was fastened at the top of the other pillar. Start the garland around the pillar, the first circle being made close to the floor. Continue wrapping, covering the surface of the pillar solidly till about one-half of the height is reached. Make the next round slightly apart, and continue widening the distance toward the top. Bronze galax leaves or green would do just as well. With this decoration also there need be no tacking or scratching.

Garlands of one kind or another seem to be the most natural pillar decorations, but where there is space to spare blooming plants or a circular bank of long-stemmed flowers, ferns or other foliage may be employed to advantage. Fill in the bank with sphagnum, stem the flowers and foliage, as is done for a basket, and insert the longer, stiffer stems up against the surface of the pillar all around. Set the shorter stems and the drooping flowers around the outside. If the tall ones are disposed to droop very much, tie around the pillar with wire, as was done with the garlands. In order to make a good display the banking should be run up three or four feet. Use no trimmings at the top of the pillar for such a decoration as this.

GLOIRE DE LORRAINE.

I have quite a lot of Begonia Gloire de Lorraine which are affected with mealy bug. How is the best way to destroy them without injuring the plants? Would you also tell me through the REVIEW what plants are the most easily injured by fumigating with tobacco? BOSTON.

We haven't been troubled with mealy bug on this beautiful plant. Kerosene emulsion is one of the best remedies for this pest, but at this time of year this begonia is growing fast, the leaves are soft and I would advise trying it only on a few plants to see how it works. The following formula is that of W. N. Craig, who is posted on all fungicides and insecticides:

Dissolve one-half pound of hard soap in one gallon of boiling water. Add two gallons of kerosene and churn well with a pump for a few minutes. Use a wooden or earthen vessel. Dilute fifteen times before applying. That means dilute in fifteen times as much water, but for the begonias you had better dilute thirty times.

I would, however, prefer to use just plain water, finely but sharply applied with syringe or hose. You cannot do this by syringing the plants on the bench, but they are worth taking one by one and laying on their sides and simply knock off the bugs.

The ordinary greenhouse commercial plants that are injured by tobacco smoke are not very numerous and I have often thought and expressed my belief that plants, like ourselves, get inured to tobacco. All florists know that a heavy fumigation will injure many things, while a mild fumigation three successive nights will do no harm to the great majority of plants.

Heavy smoking will injure azaleas. It turns the foliage brown. A mild fumigation will often burn the foliage of the heliotrope and Astilbe Japonica. None of the more delicate ferns, particularly Adiantum cuneatum, should be subjected to smoke at any time. That's about all the plants we cover up if in a house where smoking must be done.

Smoking will also make the petals of some flowers drop, especially the single pelargoniums, both the show and zonal varieties. In conclusion, smoke often and mildly. Although I have mentioned but a few that show you plainly how much they are injured, may there not be many more that are stunted and hurt by a heavy fumigation, although their injury is less apparent? W. S.

THE PROBLEM OF HELP.

To the judicious selection of help can be ascribed the success of many of our larger establishments and the executive who makes this branch a particular study is sure of his reward.

The ability to fill the position can only be judged by the character of previous work and we have in a great measure to rely on evidence furnished by previous employers. The duty of giving a departing employe a certificate is a very onerous one and to be truthful, honest and conscientious to both him and his prospective employer calls for the exercise of great tact and care so that neither may be injured.

Floral Urn, made by Joseph M. Smely, Aurora, Ill.

It happens too frequently that when a really good man wishes, for reasons satisfactory to himself, to make a change and notifies his employer of his intention, that, instead of taking the notice as a business proposition, the employer makes of it a personal issue and, allowing his feelings to sway him, can and often does injure the prospects of a deserving man and also incurs the risk of making a life-long enemy.

On the other hand there are employers who are so charitable and good natured that they have not the vim to call a spade a spade but give each and everyone of their hands a good card on their departure, when in many cases they are thankful to see them depart. This of course is very unfair to the trade and leads to serious results when such men, on the face of their certificates, are given positions of trust.

Every employer who has the interests of the craft at heart should exercise the greatest care and eliminate all personal feelings and considerations when recommending employes, so that the really good men may derive some benefit from former service and good conduct and that the incompetent, careless or drinking workman may be unable to foist his services on an unsuspecting employer to the detriment of his stock and the reputation of his place.

The proper management of help requires sound judgment, impartiality and the elimination of all personal feelings, treating each man according to his merits, discriminating in favor of those who by their energy and care show that they have the interests of the place at heart and have a pride in their profession and are not merely putting in so many hours per day to enable them to draw their pay.

Employers can greatly add to the efficiency of their help by taking an interest in their welfare, studying their wants, aspirations and ambitions and directing them in their studies. See that they are decently and comfortably accommodated in regard to rooms and board and, above all, be prepared to pay on pay day. Show them that you are interested in them, inspire a spirit of good-fellowship and this will call forth the best of service.

Discourage all tale-bearing or favor-seekers and if any of the help by reason of bad habits or objectionable temperament makes himself disagreeable to the others, make no scruple about dismissing him, as discipline cannot be maintained under such conditions and where friction exists some of the duties are certain to be neglected or performed in a very perfunctory manner.

A systematic apportionment of the work so that each one, from the section foreman to the errand boy knows his duty, and a careful supervisor who knows neither fear nor favor and who, like Cæsar's wife, should himself be above suspicion, are essential to the well being of every establishment and will without doubt gain for it a good name and attract enterprising men to its service. The result will be financial success. RIBES.

Vegetable Forcing.

TOMATOES.

Plants under way should be kept growing freely. If stunted now for want of pot room, or checked by any other means, it will mean loss of time and considerable trouble may be experienced in getting them back into a free-growing, healthy condition. They should be kept fully exposed to light and crowding should be guarded against, so that the plants will not become drawn. The more compact and stocky the plants can be kept the quicker they will flower and set fruit after they are planted in the benches. Plants that are drawn and weakly for want of sufficient light and space in the earlier stages of their growth will usually be bare of fruit for nearly two feet up from the soil.

Much diversity of opinion exists regarding the distance at which the plants should be set in the benches. Some contend that where two square feet bench space is allowed per plant they give the largest yield for the total space occupied, but I prefer to allow two and a half feet and consider that the larger yield per plant, and the better fruit resulting, amply makes up for the slight loss in weight of yield.

Last year a query appeared in the Review regarding windy or hollow tomatoes. At the time I said that the trouble was new to me and was inclined to lay the cause to the variety grown being unsuitable for forcing. Other writers gave their experience and seemed to think that too much root room was a cause. The confining of the roots will, of course, induce a firmer growth in the plants, which firmness will naturally be imparted to the fruits. The freedom from this disease in our own case is probably due to the fact that we have always confined the roots to a limited space.

The mid-winter crop we grow in a house fitted with raised benches and it is more convenient for us to set the plants in boxes than to have the trouble of filling the benches and emptying them for the one crop. Our boxes are one foot wide, nine inches deep and thirty inches long. In each we grow three plants and have always obtained satisfactory results. If anyone troubled with windy or hollow fruits will try this or some other means of confining the roots I think that he will find that little or no trouble will be had.

In substantiation of the soft growth theory as the cause of windy or hollow fruit, I have observed that this summer quite a few of the outdoor tomatoes have been affected in this way and that the trouble was most apparent after protracted spells of dull, damp weather, such weather naturally inducing soft growth in the plants. W. S. Croydon.

SEASONABLE WORK.

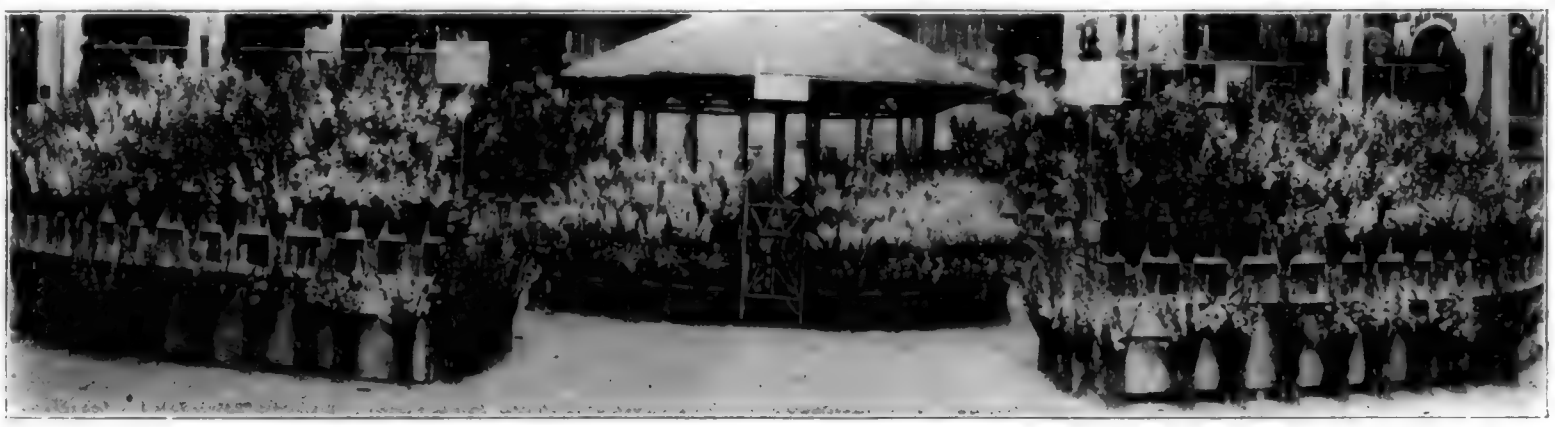
The time of year has again arrived for most violet growers, when you have to exercise greater care in watering, not to overdo it, than you have had to exercise for the past month or so, as from now on you can never tell how quickly you may have a change in weather from these beautiful warm days to several days of cold rain. For this reason the watering should be done early in the day, and very thoroughly, on a day that promises to be bright and fair. Then do not water again until the plants are rather on the dry side.

For the very reason that you are not watering as freely as heretofore, you will have to observe renewed vigilance in watching for that subtle enemy, the red spider, lest he succeed in acquiring a foothold and the weather become such that you will not be able to syringe freely enough to eradicate him, to the detriment of your future crop and the ruination of the leaves, thus not only hurting the lungs of the plants, but also causing a deficiency of foliage for properly bunching the blooms when you commence to pick. Therefore, once or twice a week, when watering, be sure and spray the plants from underneath from all sides and thus destroy any beginning of the pests. As I have before said, this should be done on a bright day, that they may soon dry off.

Another thing that should be aimed at is to firm up the growth from this time forward. Naturally the plants have made a comparatively rank, soft growth during the warm weather, and this would be more susceptible to disease of any kind were the conditions such as to check growth. Consequently strive to have the growth as hard and firm as is possible, although I do not mean by this to in any way stunt it.

The ventilation will also begin to have to be more closely attended to, but do not make the error of closing up at all until you are sure of a good hard frost. Give all the air that is possible, both day and night, as this is one of your best aids in getting that stocky, hard growth. When you do get up to a night that you have to fire a little, be sure and leave your ventilators up four to six inches.

Do not forget to spread your feast of Paris green and sugar for the delectation of the sow bugs and centipedes, yes, and stray snails, that may be traveling about seeking what they may devour. You also have to watch out for aphides. Dust the plant over with tobacco dust and to get the dust where it is effective you will have to hold apart the leaves so as to get the dust on the crown and young new growth where the aphides love to congregate. Do not leave this on over two or three hours and then wash off thoroughly with the spray.



And right here I might say that if you wonder what to use as a duster, you can take any good-sized tin can and punch the bottom full of holes with a shingle nail. This will prove equally as good as a more costly sifter and is easily obtained. Dusting is one of the jobs that must be thoroughly done and should not be left to "the boy" but looked after personally, that the aphides may get no foothold, as it is surely "good-bye crop" if they do.

Then there are those ever present jobs that are never done, picking off the old leaves, trimming off the runners, stirring the top soil and generally keeping them in the finest of condition. It is well to keep the buds off for some time yet, excepting, of course, with anyone who has a special demand and trade calling for early flowers; otherwise the strength of the plant is better conserved for the holiday crop, which it is the aspiration of every grower to have as large as possible. R. E. Shuphelt.

GLADIOLI AT ST. LOUIS.

As at the Pan-American Exposition, so at the St. Louis World's Fair, in the Horticulture building, the chief autumnal attraction in the cut flower department is the gladiolus exhibit from Meadowvale farm, Berlin, N. Y., consisting of 725 vases containing 8,000 spikes. The principal strains shown are the Groff's hybrids in their several sections. The arrangement on circular shelves between which are mirrors, increases the attractiveness of the exhibit and is a credit to Mr. Cowee. All of the material used in constructing the rustic booth in the center, as well as the outside circle, came from Meadowvale farm.

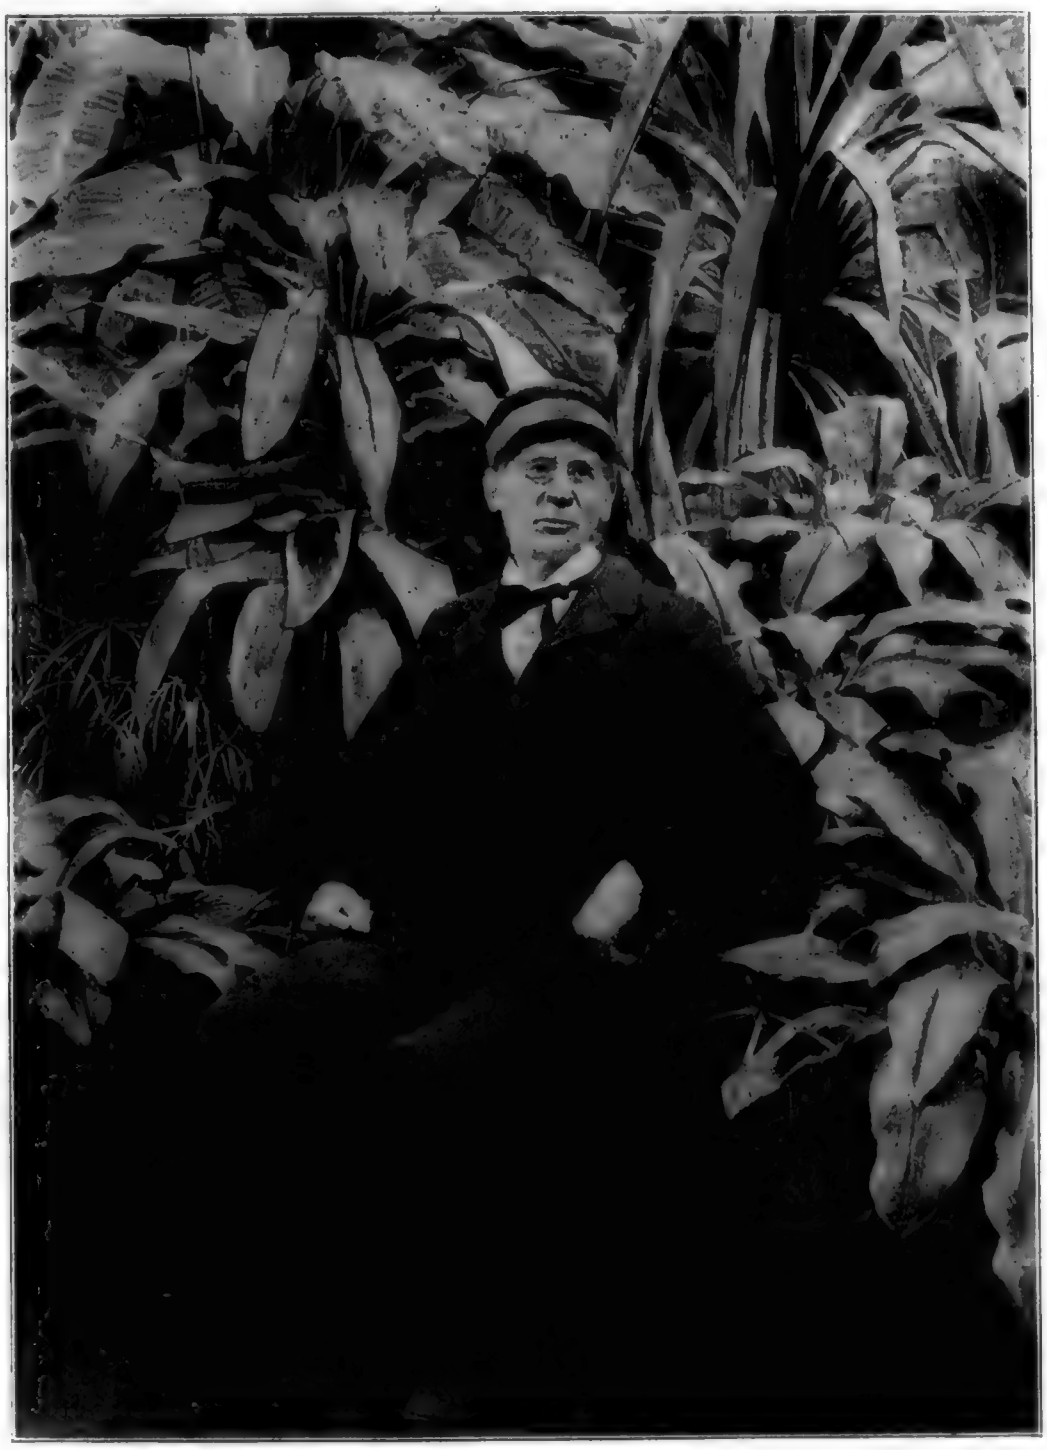
fields at Berlin, N. Y., where 100 acres are being grown, also from a five-acre planting at Belleville, Ill., where about half a million bulbs have been planted at three different periods so as to secure a succession of blooming. Upon the exposition grounds Mr. Cowee has planted in six beds, about 125,000 bulbs.



While the season has been exceptional and the soil in which the bulbs were planted not of the best, still taking everything into consideration, you could not ask for better results.

J. H. HADKINSON.

A VETERAN OF THE CRAFT.

It is not given to every man whose tenure of office is so dependent upon administrative changes as are positions at Lincoln park, Chicago, to preserve his equilibrium through more than the span of the average human life, but Charles J. Strombach has survived political upheavals for thirty-five years and for twenty-nine years has been head gardener. Now, however, he has been retired as past the age for active service, for he is 62. No man, no more than any woman, enjoys being told he is getting old and quite naturally this good gardener was reluctant to surrender his active duties to a younger, if no less capable man. "Did you ever see me looking better?" is his query to every friend. He is now "consulting gardener," a position created for him by the park commissioners at the request of Supt. Warder and in recognition of his long and capable service.

Charles J. Strombach came of gardening stock. He received his training in the Royal School of Horticulture at Stockholm, in Sweden, and in various private and commercial places on the continent. Coming to America while in his youth, he brought knowledge of his vocation such as the young man of this day finds it difficult to obtain, next to impossible in this country. Gravitating to Chicago, as so many of his countrymen did in that day, Mr. Strombach took up the work at Lincoln park in 1869, when the place was but a fraction of its present size and wholly devoid of its present aspect. To his genius much of the very excellent landscape work is due. At the beginning there was but a little glass, only for working purposes, and nothing like a collection of plants. Today there is one of the finest ranges of glass and the best and largest collection of plants in the west, all developed under Mr. Strombach's guidance. Indeed, as Supt. Warder is quoted as saying, "It was only due him that some place should be provided."

The Market.

Conditions are much better in our market than they have been before this season. Frost has cut off practically all outdoor stock. A few gladioli still come in, selling at 75 cents to $1.50 per dozen for the best, but dahlias, asters, feverfew and other such stuff are gone. Carnations are now of fine quality. Blooms of Mrs. Patten, Enchantress, Queen, Lawson, Fair Maid and other popular sorts are almost equal to winter stock. Prices vary from $3 for the best down to $1 for inferior blooms.

Roses are shortening up somewhat, with a perceptible improvement in quality and a betterment in prices. Beauties are in smaller supply, at from $6 to $25 per 100. Kaiserins and Carnots bring $2 to $8 and Brides and Bridesmaids $2 to $6. Chrysanthemums have appeared, Malcolm Orr, of Lynn, bringing in the first Lady Fitzwygram on September 22. The same grower had some nice Marquis de Montmort on September 24, on which date Wm. Nicholson and S. J. Goddard each had a fine lot of Fitzwygrams. Prices were $1.50 to $2 per dozen. Lily of the valley brings $4 to $5, Waban Conservatories sending the best. A little better demand is noted for asparagus and adiantum. A few single violets have appeared. They are small and pale-colored yet, however.

The Co-operative Markets.

Stallholders in the two flower markets were apportioned their stands on September 24, there being a large and animated crowd at each market. The Park street stand, while very small and cramped compared with the Columbus avenue location, which is now advertised "To Let," has been thoroughly overhauled and looks very neat. A visit to the Music Hall market showed a wonderful transformation since a previous visit. The floor was beautifully lighted by electricity and seemed very cozy. Some 130 stalls are rented, with a prospect of more being taken soon. The principal entrance is from Hamilton place, but there are two additional ones leading to Music Hall place and Washington street and a probability of a fourth leading to Bromfield street very shortly. The salesroom here is much larger than at Park street, covering 6,000 square feet.

The markets opened for business on September 26 and each seemed satisfied with business transacted. It is to be regretted that a split has occurred. There is room for one big, strong market and, while two may each do a good business for some time, we expect to see the present feeling between the two factions gradually die out and eventually an amalgamation take place on lines satisfactory to both sides.

The Autumnal Show.

The new halls of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society were never better filled with choice exhibits, nor more tastefully arranged, than on the occasion of the annual autumn show September 22 to 25. The committee of arrangements had worked hard and deserves special commendation. Exhibits were so arranged that the work of the committees was greatly lightened when making their awards, something that we trust may continue at future shows.

Plants completely filled the main exhibition hall. For best finished group of foliage plants to cover 200 square feet, Mrs. J. L. Gardner, Wm. Thatcher, gardener, beat J. S. Bailey, J. Nylan, gardener. These exhibitors were in same order for six stove and greenhouse plants, Mr. Thatcher's winning six being Dracæna Goldeana and D. Sanderiana, Dieffenbachia Bausei and D. magnifica, Maranta Porteana and Phyllotænium Lindeni. For pair palms the prizes went to Mrs. J. L. Gardner, A. F. Estabrook, Geo. Barker, gardener, and J. S. Bailey. The last named won for five specimen ferns with Davallia Mooreana and D. Fijiensis majus, Gleichenia circinata glauca, Polypodium aureum and Nephrolepis Piersoni. Mrs. Gardner beat A. F. Estabrook for five adiantums, showing fine plants of cuneatum, Farleyense, cuneatum grandiceps, Æthiopicum and gracillimum.

J. S. Bailey showed the best twenty-five crotons in 6-inch pots and A. F. Estabrook the best six caladiums. Mrs. Gardner won for specimen Ouvirandra fenestralis and ten Begonia Rex, also for six dracænas, J. S. Bailey being a close second in the latter class. Peter Cairns won second prize for specimen greenhouse flowering plant with Epidendrum vitellinum majus. R. and J. Farquhar & Co. put up a fine group of palms and other foliage plants interspersed with large vases of Lilium speciosum, Farquhar's Christmas lily and other cut flowers. Julius Roehrs showed a nice table of orchids and ferns, the former including such seasonable sorts as Vanda cærulea, Dendrobium Phalænopsis, Cattleya Bowringeana and C. labiata, Cypripedium callosum and others. E. J. Mitton, J. Lawson, gardener, also had a nice table of orchids arranged with ferns, chiefly cattleyas and Dendrobium Phalænopsis. Lager & Hurrell had a nice collection of orchids in fine flower, including Lælia elegans, Cattleya gigas and C. labiata, Vanda cærulea, Oncidium varicosum Rogersii, Odontoglossum grande and others.

F. R. Pierson Co. showed a table of their new sport of the Pierson fern, named Tarrytown, which scored one point higher than at the spring show, now securing a silver medal. Henry A. Dreer showed a beautiful tank of nymphæas and other aquatics, which received a silver medal. Certificates of merit were awarded Nymphæa Zanzibariensis Pennsylvania and N. dentata superba, two beautiful new varieties.

A. F. Estabrook had a collection of large solanums in tubs and Mrs. M. L. Atwood well bloomed achimenes grown in a dwelling house. Robert Cameron, from the Harvard Botanic Gardens, contributed an extensive and beautifully arranged group of foliage plants. In addition to a gratuity, a silver medal was awarded for a superb plant of Phyllotænium Lindeni and certificates of merit to Calathea Makoyana and C. Lindeniana. Some well-flowered plants of Nerine corusca helped to brighten this group, which was the best we have seen for years.

In cut flowers dahlias were shown in thousands in first-class condition. While the cactus section was perhaps most largely shown, there was keen competition in the classes for show, fancy, pompon, decorative and single varieties. Had the show been one day later hardly a bloom would have been shown, the freeze of the morning of September 22 wiping them out. A comparatively new exhibitor, E. W. Ela, was the most successful, winning five firsts, one second and one third. W. C. Winter took two firsts, three seconds and three thirds and J. K. Alexander one first and three seconds. Other large exhibitors who took prizes were H. F. Burt, W. P. Lothrop, Geo. D. Cook and G. H. Walker. W. C. Winter won for the best general display arranged for effect. Geo. D. Cook showed the best novelty in Mrs. Roosevelt, a fine pink decorative variety.

For twenty named gladioli, J. K. Alexander was first, while for 100 spikes W. P. Lothrop won. Carl Blomberg and Mrs. E. M. Gill won in order named for thirty varieties herbaceous plants. Bayard Thayer, Wm. Anderson, gardener, took first premium for tank of aquatic flowers with a fine arrangement. Walter Hunnewell, T. D. Hatfield, gardener, and Blue Hill Nurseries each had a large table of herbaceous perennials. The latter secured a first-class certificate for Tritoma Pfitzeri, not a new plant but one which had only received honorable mention previously. J. E. Rothwell, Emil Johannson, gardener, had fifty-five varieties of choice cut orchids. Henry Wood showed the first violets of the season. There were numerous promiscuous displays of dahlias and other flowers. For forty varieties of native plants prizes went to Misses Doran, Carl Blomberg, Mrs. A. Clark, Miss Isabella Shattuck and Miss Ida Henderson. As usual there was an extensive and meritorious display of fruits and vegetables.

Various Notes.

Our first freeze of the season came early and was unusually severe. On the mornings of September 22 and 23 minimum temperatures were recorded from 20° to 30° above zero, the lower figures being in the Sudbury valley. Practically all tender plants and vegetables were killed outright, a considerable loss being sustained by corn and cranberry growers in this state. Such early and severe frost had not occurred previously for thirty-five years.

The show at Horticultural Hall brought many visitors to town the past week. Among these were F. C. Green, Warwick, R. I.; F. R. Pierson and J. R. Fotheringham, Tarrytown, N. Y.; Thomas Knight, Rutherford, N. J.; Geo. F. Struck, Summit, N. J., and A. J. Newell, Pomfret, Conn.

At the meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club, on September 20, three new members were elected. An invitation from Waban Rose Conservatories to visit that establishment about the end of October was unanimously accepted and a vote of thanks tendered to Mr. Montgomery for the same. After James Wheeler had described his vacation experiences, including his success in picking out winning horses at the Clinton Fair, W. J. Stewart gave a most interesting account of his visit to the World's Fair, particularly of the horticultural section. He considered St. Louis quite a law abiding city, in which opinion he was supported by Mr. Morton, who after describing some of the Chicago cemeteries visited during the late session of the Association of American Cemetery Superintendents, referred to the bedding at the World's Fair.

J. W. Duncan and W. N. Craig offered short contributions to the evening's entertainment. Julius Heurlin showed a collection of hardy herbaceous plants, including the new tritoma, Empress, and Charles Sander had specimens of the lace bug which he finds very destructive on foliage of rhododendrons. Spraying with whale oil soap was the best remedy.

The garden committee of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society paid a visit by invitation to the dahlia gardens of W. J. Winser, at Brockton, Mass., on September 21. They found a fine collection comprising hundreds of the best varieties. A few hours after their visit the plants were all destroyed by frost.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

There isn't anything out of the ordinary doing but demand has shown an appreciable gain during the past week and conditions are more nearly normal than for some time. Shipping trade is quite active and the local call indicates that some of the leading retailers are finding some good work.

The average quality of the rose crops shows material improvement and there are now available enough good flowers for all requirements, including considerable stock which may be classed as fancy. This applies particularly to Brides and Maids but Beauties are gaining steadily and in the past week have not only been of better quality but in better demand than heretofore. Not many long Liberty are seen and Chatenay has not yet much stem.

Carnations are steadily increasing in quality and lengthening in stem; the size of flower has been all right ever since the indoor stock began to come in. Several growers who have had Lawson, Enchantress and others under glass all summer are getting superb stock for September carnations. There are still a great many low grade flowers but even these sell rather better than they did because asters are pretty poor now and practically out of it.

There is considerable inquiry for fancy mums for early weddings and receptions. A few good ones are seen and the supply will increase rapidly after next week. The receipts of violets are increasing quite rapidly and the good ones sell fairly well, but many of them are too poor to be useful.

The wedding season is causing a better demand for valley and "green goods," and these are plentiful. Tuberoses are abundant. Good dahlias are selling fairly well but shorts and poor flowers are hard to move.

Club Meeting.

At the club meeting September 22 the subject of the club's work for the Carnation Society's convention was taken up and the president instructed to appoint a committee of three with power to appoint sub-committees to arrange finances and all details of entertainment. Nominations of officers for the ensuing year developed a surprising and deplorable lack of ambition to achieve honor and renown in the guidance of the club's destinies. A committee had to be appointed to make a slate. The committee consisted of Messrs. Vaughan, Hauswirth and Asmus and the nominees are as follows: For president, W. N. Rudd; vice-president, J. P. Risch; recording secretary, Robert Johnstone; financial secretary, George Asmus; treasurer, Edgar Sanders; trustees, F. F. Benthey, W. L. Palinsky, M. Barker, H. B. Howard and Leonard Kill. For the committee on exhibits of the evening, M. Barker recommended that a certificate of merit be awarded Gladiolus princeps exhibited by Vaughan's Seed Store.

At Lincoln Park.

There hasn't been a geranium in sight in the big parterre at Lincoln park this season. One of the most attractive beds was planted with small rubbers with Grevillea robusta between. A novelty here was the use of Pennisetum Rupelianum as an edging for big beds of Egandale canna and P. macrourum for beds of Souvenir d'Antoine Crozy. The effect was fine but would have been even better had Egandale attained its usual height this season; it is quite a little short of it. In the service houses they have a splendid lot of cattleyas in a growing collection of orchids, many freshly imported. The mums are in fine shape. There is a nice lot of cyclamens and Lorraines for later show. To apply insecticides and fungicides they use a sprayer which seems an unusually good one. It is made by the Rice Automatic Sprayer Co., at East Windsor Hill, Conn. A new cool house, for azaleas, etc., is being built. It will be 34x95 with a lean-to.

Various Notes.

H. Klunder, on State street, has attracted attention to his window this week with a bowl of Tritoma Pfitzeri.

Capt. H. Schuenemann starts north next week after his annual cargo of Christmas trees and bouquet green. He is going to an entirely new field this year, the old pickings having been pretty well exhausted.

John Muir has one of the handsomest stores in town at his new place at 4647 Grand boulevard and probably the best arranged store in the west. At the opening, September 21, he had hundreds of visitors and made a fine show of stock.

J. F. Wilcox, of Council Bluffs, was in town Monday with his son, Roy, whom he will see started at college at Cornell and then go on to New York for a few days. The second son of the house of Wienhoeber also started for Cornell this week.

O. J. Friedman has a big decoration on this week for Carson, Pirie, Scott & Co., whose manager is his brother-in-law.

C. W. McKellar is again getting cattleyas, a scarce article for some months.

Bernard Zalinger is now John Sinner's assistant at the Exchange.

George Asmus is putting in an ice box worth $275 at the Schiller store on West Madison street.

Sol Garland is sending Percy Jones some exceptionally good Princess of Wales violets in good quantity, also. for so early.

L. Coatsworth has returned from a few days' visit at New Castle. He reports everything looking good.

Kennicott Bros. Co. has been making wire work faster than it sold this summer and have stock enough on hand for another of their popular sales.

H. Luedtke, at Maywood, says Lady Bountiful is the best white carnation to date, but he likes Albatross also. Flamingo won't develop its flowers for him; buds just stand still.

A. L. Randall Co. says there is no further occasion to complain about the quality of roses. Mr. Thomas is looking for unlimited supplies of violets again this year, quality rather better than last year, according to the growers.

Gunnar Teilmann, Marion, Ind., has been sending E. C. Amling very fine Monrovia mums this week. While Mr. Amling was out on a little business trip one day last week he took time to catch a ten and a half pound pickerel.

Eli Cross, of Grand Rapids, was over on Monday and says violets are looking fine there.

A. L. Vaughan went to Grand Rapids yesterday for a few days stay.

Other visitors: H. A. Catlin, White Sulphur Springs, W. Va.; Theo. Miller, St. Louis; Wm. Rayner, Oconomowoc, Wis.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

It was a case of "freeze out" last week up the Hudson and cold enough in and around New York to chill the outdoor stock and so remove a menace to the general market that the wholesalers very much appreciate. The temperature fell below 32° in many places up the state and in the neighborhood of Nyack and Poughkeepsie a winter temperature prevailed. Asters, dahlias and gladioli, therefore, are of some account and the prices realized for good stock are at last satisfactory. Violets come daily, but in limited quantities and of very poor quality. Far better hold them until the middle of October, especially as their value is cheapened by the early sidewalk merchants' offerings.

Chrysanthemums have made an early start and some excellent stock of Marquis de Montmort and Mme. Gastellier has arrived. The indications are for a flood of them before October is a week old. Orchids have been short in supply for a week and the demand for them shows a steady growth, out of town orders growing constantly in numbers.

The supply of roses increases every day and good stock finds a ready market, but enormous quantities of the medium and lower grades can be had in large lots at the buyer's offer.

Little hope of a satisfactory revival can be counted on until the smoke of the election contest has cleared away. Then we look confidently for the best season the cut flower and general florists' business has ever known in this country. This seems to be the general opinion of all branches of the trade.

The Institute Exhibition.

Exhibitions began with the American Institute in New York in 1831. The seventy-third took place last Wednesday and Thursday and was a great success, both in quality of exhibits and attendance. Special premiums were numerous. The banks of flowering and decorative plants exhibited by Julius Roehrs and Siebrecht & Son were up to their standard and Lager & Hurrell staged an effective display of cattleyas, odontoglossums and cypripediums. The Clucas & Boddington Co. received special premiums for dahlias, phlox and herbaceous flowers and made a large and beautiful exhibit.

A. L. Miller, of Brooklyn, received a special for his display of his new white dahlia, Kaiserin Augusta Victoria, and the F. R. Pierson Co. got a diploma for their new fern, Tarrytown. John Lewis Childs showed gladioli and tuberous begonias and Beaulieu, of Woodhaven, had a collection of dahlias. In addition to prize winners already mentioned were Geo. H. Hale, Seabright, N. J.; J. P. Sorenson, Stamford, Conn.; C. W. Bolton, Pelham, N. Y.; H. L. Burt, Taunton, Mass; W. P. Lothrop, East Bridgewater, Mass.; Thos. J. Holland, Malvern, Pa.; Geo. H. Hemming, Brooklyn, N. Y.; James Kennedy, Deal, N. J.; Frank H. Presby, Montclair, N. J.

With the Bulb Houses.

These are the busy days among the bulb houses, immense shipments leaving the city every day. Thorburn, Henderson, Stumpp & Walter Co., Elliott, Boddington, H. H. Berger & Co., Suzuki & Iida, Henry & Lee, Ralph Ward & Co., Meyer and Joosten all report the busiest fall trade in their experience.

H. H. Berger & Co. have just received their first importation of Cattleya Harrisoniana from Brazil and will have orchid shipments throughout the year. Their comment on business is that "this has been an unusually good season."

A. T. Boddington's store on West Fourteenth street has been rearranged and is crowded to the doors by their importations. Their second shipment of azaleas has arrived. Mr. Boddington is visiting his eastern customers this week and Mr. Begbie has just returned from a two weeks' outing among his friends in North Carolina.

Various Notes.

The dahlia supply from Atco's 100-acre base is handled in New York by Gunther and Ghormley. Some very fine stock has been arriving daily until the cold snap intervened.

The orchid growers of this vicinity are exhibiting at the flower shows in quantity, Lager & Hurrell and Julius Roehrs having splendid exhibits at the American Institute exhibition here last week and at Boston.

The wheels move slowly in the auction business. In the city it is hard to draw the buyers. Small audiences have been the rule. It would be a shame to mention some of the prices realized. The out of town sales of Bird, at Arlington, N. J., and Troy, at New Rochelle, N. Y., failed to attract the buyers the merits of the goods deserved.

Tuesday, September 20, that expert in American Beauty specials, Henry Hentz, Jr., of Madison, N. J., was presented with his first daughter.

N. LeCakes & Co. are much pleased with the establishment of their headquarters on Twenty-eighth street and have added a plant department to their business. They will handle holly for Thanksgiving and Christmas in large quantities. John A. Foley, formerly with Bradshaw, is bookkeeper for Mr. LeCakes.

Wm. Ford, of Ford Bros., has been out of the city during the past week but is now fully recuperated and ready for the fall rush, which he anticipates will commence earlier than usual.

All interested in the formation of the New York Florists' Bowling Club are requested to meet October 7 at the bowling alleys, Twenty-third street, near Sixth avenue, and at 7:30 so that officers may be elected and all preliminaries completed before the evening's bowling. An evening will be selected satisfactory to the majority and matches arranged with neighboring clubs, so that a greater interest may be developed.

Two members of the New York Florists' Club passed away last week, J. B. Hyatt, of Winfield, L. I., and John Rickert, of Weehawken, N. J. Mr. Hyatt was formerly a member of the firm of T. B. Hyatt & Son, nurserymen, and Mr. Rickert a prominent grower whose early death is mourned by a large circle of relatives and friends. The sympathies of the trade are extended to the bereaved families.

L. J. Kreshover tells some very interesting experiences of his European trip, especially those of Paris and the Tyrolean Alps. His knowledge of French and German made the journey one of perfect delight. Many novelties for the supply trade will attest the combination of business with pleasure. He met Wm. Burns, the florist of Sixth avenue, in Switzerland unexpectedly and their mutual delight as foreign travelers can be imagined.

Mr. Burnham, at Bloomingdale's, has one of the finest retail florists' stores in the city and greenhouse facilities on the roof that more than double his former capacity. Reception rooms, decorations and the best plants in the market will give him encouragement to develop an immense business as compared with any other department store. The maintaining of right prices under his management has commended him to the good will of the legitimate florists and demonstrated the possibility of conducting the work, even where department store methods in all other lines prevail, so as not to make this special department a menace to the retail florist.

The dahlia and canna exhibit at the rooms of the New York Florists' Club October 10 should maintain the interest in these special nights, which, under the presidency of Mr. Traendly, have added so largely to the attendance and made it a record year to date.

The Mineola Fair last week was the greatest Long Island has ever seen. The fruit and flower exhibits have never been equaled there. John Lewis Childs' great pyramid of palms, ferns and decorative plants called for special commendation. An attendance of over 100,000 for the week attests the popularity of the exhibition. J. Austin Shaw.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The cut flower season is opening fast and the general opinion among the store men is that trade is expanding steadily and confidence increases. The lower temperature stimulates the demand for work of all kinds in the florists' line. While there is no great amount of business to report, a marked improvement for the past two weeks is noticed. Quite a number of social events came the past week, including early fall weddings and fall openings in the large downtown stores, adding very much to the demand for cut flowers and decorative plants.

Saturday we had quite a heavy rain, which was very much needed by the growers, who report that nearly everything is housed and they are working on boilers and heating apparatus, so as to be ready for the first cold snap, as frost is predicted for this week. The plant trade is picking up and there is a good call for kentias and other palms, also Boston ferns. Of the latter, Mr. Felter, on Lexington avenue, has some of the finest seen in a long time.

Stock at the commission houses is of fair quality, but first-class material rather scarce and plenty of the second grade at cheap prices. In roses, first-class American Beauties are very scarce at $3 per dozen, shorts from 75 cents to $1.50 per dozen, culls $3 and $4 per 100. Bride, Maid, Carnot, Meteor and Kaiserin run $4, $5 and $6 per 100 for the best, $2 and $3 for seconds. The house-grown carnations are still short in stem, with fair flowers. Big lots of Mrs. Fisher from the field were in last week. Outdoor stock brings 50 and 75 cents per 100, house-grown from $1 to $2 per 100. The demand is very large just now.

Violets made their appearance the past week. They are, of course, small and shriveled and hardly good enough for counter sales. The wholesalers demanded 25 and 35 cents per 100, with slow sales. Good valley had some demand last week, owing to several large weddings. The stock is of good quality, at $3 and $4 per 100. Quite a lot of tuberose spikes came in on Saturday, which sold clean at $4 per 100. Asters, hydrangeas and gladioli are over and only a few of these come in. Cosmos has not yet come in quantity. Adiantum is scarce. Other greens are plentiful.

Various Notes.

C. Young & Sons Co. report business very good, especially in shipping orders, which were quite heavy recently.

Beyer Bros. are busy potting up their chrysanthemums from the field. They expect to have a fine lot of market plants this year, also single-stemmed plants.

C. C. Sanders is also very busy with his chrysanthemum plants, of which he will have a fine lot in both cut blooms and plants. Other stock at his place is looking at its best.

The trustees of the Missouri Botanical Garden gave their fifteenth annual banquet on Thursday night at the Buckingham Club, which brought together one of the most distinguished bodies of scientists ever assembled in this country. The banquet is provided for in the will of the late Henry Shaw. This banquet is generally held early in spring, but on account of so many distinguished men attending the International Congress of Arts and Sciences at the World's Fair, it was postponed until they all arrived. The guests numbered nearly 200. Winfield S. Chaplin, Chancellor of Washington University, officiated as toastmaster. A number of informal speeches were made during the evening.

Theo. Miller and young Mr. Kalish acted as judges during the four days of registration last week. Theo. will now be known as Judge Miller. His place is stocked up with a nice lot of plants of all kinds and business is steadily improving in cut flowers.

The Riessen Floral Co. has been very busy of late with theatre work, also decorations. They expect again to furnish the decorations for the Veiled Prophet's ball, which will be held next week Tuesday at the Merchants' Exchange. The decorations are usually very large and attractive.

Frank M. Ellis is giving his place a fresh coat of paint and is making big preparations for the fall trade, which is now upon us. He reports excellent trade, both shipping and local.

At C. A. Kuehn's a fine line of supplies can be seen. Mr. Kuehn has a large lot of consignors who will have a fine lot of cut blooms for this season. He reports trade good in all lines, wire work, supplies and cut stock.

Henry Berning has laid in an extra supply of florists' goods of all kinds. Stock at this place is also very plentiful and trade good in all its branches. Mr. Berning is looking for a big trade this winter.

Theo. Miller left Sunday night for a short trip to Chicago and Fort Wayne, Ind., on both business and pleasure.

Robert Beyer, Geo. Windler, J. J. Beneke, Theo. Miller, J. Kalish and Emil Schray will all serve as judges at the coming fall election.

Bowling.

The bowling season has opened and the florists will again be in the game every Monday night. A. Y. Ellison will this year roll with the Rosedales and Kuehn and Beneke with the Jewelers. Carl Beyer will again roll with the Western Bowling Club.

The florists are still rolling for the silver cup, which will end next Monday night. Those who have handicaps are all in the lead. The following are scores up to date for the prize:

Name.	No. games.	Total.	Average.
O. R. Beneke	6	1032	172
Ed. Gerlach	9	1535	171
F. C. Weber	9	1524	169

C. A. Kuehn	9	1403	156
Theo. Miller	6	817	136
Carl Beyer	5	715	143

Only seven members rolled Monday night. O. R. Beneke still leads. The following scores were made:

FROM OUR ENGLISH EXCHANGES.

The Gardeners' Magazine.

The way to grow good pentstemons, with huge spikes, massive bells, and abundance of foliage, is to make a selection of varieties, seedlings, if good enough (but they never are from an ordinary packet of seed), insert the cuttings at the right time, root them properly, encourage them to grow freely away in spring, and never allow a check. Stunted plants cannot produce bells two and a half inches in diameter, and yet these are the kind of blooms I aim at, and produce.

Am well pleased with the Review, particularly with Mr. Scott's notes.—H. Huebner, Groton, Mass.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The untimely frosts had a serious effect on plants and flowers outdoors. This has been especially felt in gladioli, now in brisk demand, and to a lesser extent in dahlias. On Saturday Arthur Cowee wired the Leo Niessen Co. that his gladioli were over, and this seems true of all the other growers. Dahlias, now in their prime, suffered, but fortunately not so much. L. K. Peacock reports the temperature fell to 29° at Atco, but luckily some of his dahlias were sheltered by peach trees and others will recover. He was able to send S. S. Pennock 8,000 blooms on Monday. Cosmos was scarce for several days. Asters are about over. Single violets are coming to town in increasing quantities. There are very few chrysanthemums as yet. Carnations are improving steadily. There is no change in the rose situation; a fair demand for the best stuff and too many poor blooms. Greens do not sell well. Valley is more plentiful.

Two department stores' decorations, that of Gimbel Bros., by the Wm. Graham Co., and that of Strawbridge & Clothier, by J. J. Habermehl's Sons, have occurred since those last reported, but the general tone of the market is rather flat, despite the check on the outdoor supply.

West Grove.

It was a glorious September morning, cool and beautifully clear after the fierce storm of a few hours before, when the early train over the Baltimore Central rolled out of Broad street station. There was a pair of floricultural chaps on board, D. T. Conner, determined to convince the Chester county growers that Lord & Burnham material is the best for building, and incidentally to visit the scenes of his boyhood, and Phil, determined to prove to Chester county that the REVIEW is far and away the most progressive paper of the day; both bent on enjoying a day's outing.

By the time Chadd's Ford was reached it was decided that there were too many places to visit half of them in a day and that it would be better to see a few and do them thoroughly rather than hurry over a large number, leaving the others until some future day. Mr. Conner further decided that, while the railroad had contracted to carry the pair to West Grove, the train should be left at Avondale in order to secure a central base of operations from which both West Grove and Kennett would be easily accessible. So at Avondale the pair disembarked, instantly contracting with an enterprising local livery man for a horse warranted to outstrip anything on the road, with buggy with lap cover, hitching strap and blanket, everything complete for an indefinite period, on consideration whereof the pair were to pay the sum of $1. This merely nominal rental so delighted Mr. Conner that he put Patrick (the descendant of Maud S. responded to this name) through his paces in such good style that by nine o'clock he was safely tied at the Conard & Jones Co.'s place at West Grove, where the pair were most kindly received by Antoine Wintzer.

The place is said to consist of about 50,000 square feet of glass, with about thirty-five acres of ground outside under cultivation. Mr. Wintzer showed his visitors over the entire place, giving freely of his vast store of knowledge in a way that recalled the fascinating talk of Robert Craig, making the three and a half hours spent with him seem like but thirty minutes.

First came the inspection of the sheds. Folding paper boxes have succeeded the cumbersome cigar boxes for orders of small lots of young rose plants to all parts of this country as well as to Cuba and Porto Rico, while the tubular boxes are used when sending to Europe or South America. After a look at the boilers (one had been going a few days) came the houses devoted to tropical, bedding and miscellaneous plants used in a catalogue trade. It was a general collection, including many well-known and some scarce plants, chiefly soft-wooded. A certain Mexican palm said to be a winner as an addition to inexpensive collections—the American people do love getting something for nothing—was very prominent.

Next came the rose houses. Here Mr. Wintzer was in his element, going from variety to variety, giving the name and characteristics of each with a facility simply marvelous, proof of years of careful study combined with a true love of our calling.

"Here is the old Perle, you will mind, Dennis," he said, turning to Mr. Conner, who was his pupil for ten years. "We had it in '75, the year after it came out. This is Mme. Gerard. John Burton got some of that to replace Ma. Capucine, which wasn't a grower. See what rich foliage and fine growth Mme. Gerard has. This is Magnafrano. We could have sold 50,000 of that rose, but we sent it out too soon and never could get stock enough. This is Mme. Abel Chatenay; the American Rose Co. made a hit with that. And this is one of Lambert's new varieties. I wish you could see a flower of it. It is a beauty, but there was a Quaker lady married down here today and all the good flowers were taken off," and so on over hundreds of varieties, with occasional anathemas on the rapacity of the aforesaid Quaker lady. That bride must have had a bouquet such as H. H. Battles delights to hold up and say that "this bunch cannot be duplicated in America," though it may be Mr. Battles would not have approved the great variety of color and shades of color that bouquet must have contained. A cutting bench with sand from a near-by quarry was full of rose cuttings just callousing, bottom heat but seldom used as yet.

Outside, despite the fierce storm of the night before, was one of the finest sights one could wish to see. Five acres or more planted with cannas. Such cannas! Nowhere else can a finer collection of blue blooded, aristocratic cannas be found. Here is a beautiful bed of Brandywine, considered the best of its kind, its rich bronze foliage giving contrast to the large red flowers; there a half dozen long rows of seedlings from seed of Buttercup, grand, green-leaved, yellow-flowered cannas whose characteristic of faithful reproduction is so rare among the cannas.

Then there were the experiments under way in hybridizing. Long rows of varieties carefully labeled with date and name of variety used in cross. Here Mr. Wintzer is in a world of his own into which the ordinary mortal can go but a little way. Progress is being made slowly but surely. Hundreds of seedlings of the best sorts are thrown away every year as no improvement over their parents, while an important advance in the method of hybridizing

The Philadelphia Rambler in all stages of growth was a very interesting sight. Mr. Wintzer considers it unquestionably an improvement on the Crimson Rambler. A bed of Hydrangea paniculata grandiflora closely planted was pointed out as an example of the way this variety can be made to hold up its heads of bloom. The grounds are filled with great quantities of shrubs and small fruits.

After a hearty clasp of the hand of the representative of the Conard & Jones Co., the Philadelphians turned Patrick's head toward the West Grove Inn and dinner.

Various Notes.

M. Rice & Co. are receiving fresh importations of immortelles, immortelle wreaths and moss wreaths.

The flower store in the new Bellevue-Stratford hotel, to be occupied by J. J. Habermehl's Sons, will, it is said, be ready early in October.

R. G. Palmer, of Doylestown, built a new house the past summer which he has planted with Brides and Maids. Two of his other houses are planted with carnations.

Charles F. Edgar & Co. are receiving shipments of good single violets.

Wm. Wunder, of Pittville, is sending in fine blooms of Enchantress to the Flower Market.

Pennock Bros. had a showy window this week, just a vase of Dahlia Clifford W. Bruton, yellow, very decorative, and ferns.

Edward Reid is expected home next Sunday.

F. & H. Mergenthaler, of Germantown, are sending exceptionally fine, heavy-stemmed Kaiserins to the Flower Market.

Samuel S. Pennock is receiving choice cattleyas and dendrobiums, also early white and pink chrysanthemums.

The first president's reception at the Florists' Club next Tuesday evening is being looked forward to with eagerness.

Eugene Bernheimer has been out in Chester and Lancaster counties. Among other things, he spoke with pleasure of a visit to John E. Haines, of Bethlehem, a grower par excellence of seedling carnations. Mr. Haines has many seedlings of promise. A scarlet in particular, now five years old, should make a stir when sent out in the spring of 1906.

Wm. J. Baker is receiving some nice blooms of Fair Maid.

Phil desires to inform his grace of York that Glencoe was sold last Wednesday.

Joseph Heacock records an increasing demand for fine kentias.

A story is told—you must judge of its accuracy—of two sporty florists returning from Atlantic City. It was hot but so dusty that the parlor car windows were closed. To their surprise they saw a pretty girl in a chair nearby take off her shoe and stocking and after carefully turning the stocking inside out both were put on again. This was repeated with the other shoe and the sports matched coins to see who should find out the reason for this strange performance. Bowing politely, the loser asked the girl if she would explain her action. At first she appeared annoyed but finally said, "I was so hot I just turned the hose on myself." PHIL.

LIGHT COLORED FOLIAGE.

I have observed that this season there is a great tendency to pale colored foliage on chrysanthemums, especially where water direct from deep chalk wells has to be used. The excess of lime in such water prevents a proper development of chlorophyll to the leaves, hence a paleness in color.

To counteract this defect in the foliage sulphate of iron, sulphate of ammonia, and nitrate of soda should be employed. Either of the two former applied to the roots in a liquid state twice weekly, at the rate of half an ounce to a gallon of water, will quickly change the color of the leaves. At the same time give the plants less water than they have been regularly receiving; keep them slightly on the dry side. The cause of loss in color was a partial check to the activity of the roots, and to continue an excess of water cannot be beneficial. If the plants are at all weak or backward in growth, half a teaspoonful of nitrate of soda, finely powdered and sprinkled on the surface of each 9-inch pot, watering it in, will quickly improve the color of the leaves and hasten the growth.—E. MOLYNEUX, in Gardeners' Magazine.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

The condition of trade is only medium. Good long-stemmed roses are still hard to find, though there are plenty of shorts. Beauties are not so plentiful and the price is a trifle higher. Some very nice Perles are to be had and sell well. Many growers have more or less mildew on their stock and this does not tend to increase the value of their product, though some of them do not seem to recognize this fact.

The supply of carnations is still small and the quality nothing to speak of. It is to be hoped that the fine weather that we are having at present will bring in a larger cut, as it is hard to get along without them now that asters and gladioli are fast playing out. The demand for them continues good. Long, nice dahlias sell well. Lily of the valley is scarce, also longiflorum lilies, and the demand for them is very fair.

The first chrysanthemums of the season were seen September 23, and their quality was good, all things considered. The variety was Willowbrook. The first violets also made their appearance last week. The variety was Lady Campbell and the quality was very fair. They are grown in the mountains of Virginia. Long, good cosmos is in and is being used for window decorations, where it is especially attractive. Julius Baer has his window decorated with it, and the effect is very pretty.

Various Notes.

H. M. Altick, of Dayton, was a visitor last week. He was here in the interest of the McKinley Memorial Fund, and was quite successful in obtaining subscriptions from the florists of this city. He is an earnest and untiring worker and greatly deserves the support of all the florists of the United States.

The falling of the floor of an outbuilding at the Pleasant Ridge school, thereby precipitating twenty-five little girls into the pit beneath, was one of the most terrible accidents that have occurred in this vicinity in years. Of the nine children who perished, two, aged seven and eleven, were the daughters of Wm. Card, employed with J. M. McCullough Sons' Co. The heartfelt sympathy of all is extended to Mr. Card and his family.

B. P. Critchell has just returned from a fishing trip to St. Mary's reservoir.

Wm. Speck has just finished planting his carnations. During the summer he tore down seven old houses and replaced them with five modern ones, which puts his plant in fine shape.

Philip Popp has completed one new house, 20x60, and remodeled his whole plant. He grows some of the best pot plants seen in the flower market.

Jim O'Malley, the heavy-weight of the florists in this city, is passing out 10-cent cigars. The cause is the arrival of a twelve-pound boy at his home. Three babies in two weeks is the record of the florists of this city. Let us hope that the end is not yet!

The next regular meeting of the Florists' Society will be held Saturday evening, October 8. Let all attend, as business of importance will come before the meeting.

DES MOINES, IA.

Iowa State Fair Notes.

Not to mention amateur displays of beheaded asters, coxcombs, zinnias, pansies, dahlias, etc., without foliage, in sand flats, seen too often before to mental and digestive distress, the professional exhibit as a whole was scarcely commendable. In the amateur class fine material was wasted by the hundredweight; in fact, the quality here was much better than the professional stock used. Doubtless in other states as well as in Iowa, here is a field for educational work on the part of the state florists' associations. Last year the Society of Iowa Florists prevailed on the State Board of Agriculture to raise the value of the first premium for the best floral design from $20 to $35, second, $25, third, $15. This year it would seem advisable to make arrangement score forty points in amateur as well as in professional classes. Quantity scores thirty-five points and quality the remaining twenty-five points in judging floral exhibits. Displays of gladioli were good, asters fine quality, but poorly shown, general collections good as to variety, but lame as to arrangement.

A special feature which promised well to cut flower displays was the fine new Horticultural building with closed refrigerator cases. But instead of being placed in the center of the room with a view exposure from all directions, the cases were set on side walls and poorly lighted.

First premium was awarded to a memorial arch and pillow in white asters, carnations, Perle roses and adiantums; second premium to a massive cross of solid white aster background with garland of Chatenay roses, and a broad base filled with Boston fern plants embedded in sphagnum. The latter was much the better piece, but the former was given the first place on account of the judge's preference for white flowers in funeral work. It is a question scarcely debatable why such exhibitors so often choose funeral designs rather than special exhibition pieces, but we were treated to the other extreme in the presentation of an aster cow, and an aster pig with its snout in an aster trough, the vertebræ of all three pieces of furniture being outlined with adiantums! and this from a professional in the year of enlightenment, 1904! We need not sigh for common sense in amateur exhibits until we elevate the professionals a peg or two.

Pres., C. N. Page, Des Moines, Ia; First Vice-Pres., L. L. May, St. Paul; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 23rd annual meeting will be held on the St. Lawrence, June, 1905.

THE growers say that the early varieties of sweet corn are safe, and that there will be no scarcity of the late varieties.

THE past week has not given good bean weather; too much moisture is not a good thing at this time for beans, whether harvested or still standing.

VISITED CHICAGO: J. E. Killen, representing Wm. Rennie, Toronto, Canada; Alex Niven, London, England, who was for thirty years in the grain business at Constantinople.

THE Jerome B. Rice Seed Co. has issued its annual onion crop report, estimating the total crop as 2,835,365 bushels, as against 3,285,800 bushels from the same districts in 1903.

SEVERAL car loads of peas from northern Michigan have reached Chicago. The samples are thought to represent in a general way the year's product from that section and are reported to be very satisfactory.

LEONARD SEED CO., Chicago, report that specimen vines with the fruits on them just received at its office from several cucumber seed growing sections give very poor assurance of anything like a good crop. The specimens received cover most of the standard kinds.

PRESENT indications point to a high price for onion sets next spring. The delayed harvest at many of the important growing points brought the end of the harvest into bad weather conditions, and when onion sets are harvested wet there is little chance that they will winter well.

JAS. J. H. GREGORY, Marblehead, Mass., writes September 19: "The cold spring was unfavorable to early planting and consequently our annuals, such as corn, tomatoes and squash, are later than usual, but are cropping exceptionally well. The biennials, as a rule, kept poorly, especially cabbage and onion; consequently the crop from these will be lighter than the average. Carrots with us are the exception, having passed through in fine condition. They have seeded well but are late and an early frost would shorten the crop."

WISCONSIN SEED CROPS.

The John H. Allan Seed Co., Sheboygan, Wis., writes under date of September 23:

"Pea crops in nearly all sections are turning out much less than anticipated, the greatest shortage, as usual, being on the tender wrinkled sorts, these having suffered considerably from wet, cold weather in the fore part of the season and later the lack of genial weather did not cause the pods to fill properly. The weather in this immediate section during harvest was favorable and crop has been saved in good condition, while further north more frequent rains delayed harvest, and, of course, considerably damaged the crops.

"There does not seem to be any surplus of any sort of peas in sight, while on many of the wrinkled sorts there cannot be enough to supply the demand.

"Regarding crop of beans, it is difficult to give any definite information as harvest has only begun. But from all of our advices, wax beans will be very light crop, while some of the hardier green pod varieties have come through much better. Our crops in this section are not over one-half to two-thirds of a crop, while in New York state the return is even more disappointing."

MAILING CATALOGUES.

The postoffice department has at length issued a ruling putting into effect the act of Congress of April 28, 1904, under which catalogues may be mailed without stamps affixed. Copies of the circular are not yet available for general distribution at all postoffices but are expected to be shortly. Summarized the procedure is as follows:

First one must make application to his postmaster for a permit to mail matter under this law. Such application need be nothing more than a letter to the postmaster, who will forward it to the third assistant postmaster general at Washington for approval. At the Chicago postoffice it is supposed that this permit is good until revoked, although the superintendent of mails has no information on this point.

Permit in hand, the matter must be prepared with a prescribed form of return card in the upper left corner of the address label, name of sender and office of mailing. In the upper right corner must appear the words, "Third class matter, paid in money," stating the amount of postage on each piece and the permit number. The size of type, even, is prescribed. The separately addressed pieces must be all faced one way and separated into states, cities, etc., or tied in packages of a given number, as the postmaster may request.

The matter must be presented for mailing at the place designated by the postmaster, accompanied by a statement on a form which is provided, showing number of pieces (not less than 2000 identical pieces), permit number, class of matter and weight of a single piece, signed by the person to whom the permit is issued. If all in due form currency must then be paid at the same rate as though stamps were affixed.

PANSY SEED.

Some time ago I ordered a pound of pansy seed from a firm in London, England. The seed reached my postoffice September 3, accompanied by a notice from the postmaster at New York to the postmaster here to notify the nearest custom-house officials. He wrote to Nashville, the nearest port of entry, and they asked some questions as to contents of package, cost, etc., which were answered promptly. But nothing more has been heard and I am impatient to get my seed. I have been ordering seed in England and Germany for some years in larger quantities than this, but never had any trouble before. J. M.

The usual practice in cases where mail packages are destined for cities in which there is no custom-house is to turn them over to the collector at New York for appraisement, after which they are forwarded to destination, but sometimes they are sent for examination to the custom-house nearest to destination. It would seem that the error in this case was that examination was not made before the package was despatched to your town.

THE SEEDSMAN'S ASSISTANT.

Under date of September 23, Howard M. Earl, of W. Atlee Burpee & Co., sends out a lengthy letter in which he takes exception to certain statements of fact in a book called "The Seedman's Assistant," by Charles Johnson. Under date of August 6 we received the following letter which we think summarizes Mr. Earl's criticism:

Our good friend, Mr. Charles Johnson, in his book entitled "The Seedsman's Assistant," goes beyond the safety line when he gives synonyms for the benefit of the uninitiated. His compendium of the sources of supply will do no one any special hurt, neither will his list of how much seed should go into a packet. His argument in favor of the seed product of one section as compared with that of another is another pool not too deep for a footing in case of cramp. In my opinion, however, the synonym part of the book would better have been left out. I say this as much for the sake of Mr. Johnson's reputation as for the well-being of any who may be inclined to consider his long experience a sufficient surety for the correctness of his list. JOHN M. CLARK,
Sec'y Leonard Seed Co.

A POTATO AUCTION.

W. W. Johnson & Son, the well-known seedsmen of Boston, England, recently adopted a novel method of distributing a new potato, named Pearl. After selling considerable quantities at the high price of £7 10s per pound, they had sixty-four hills remaining in their trial ground and announced an auction. A good crowd having assembled, one hill was opened, discovering twenty tubers which were bid in for £13 10s. Then the remaining hills were sold without opening, each being tagged with the purchaser's name as sold. The average price was £9 per root. After all had been bid in, the purchasers were permitted to uncover their seed.

IT IS TO LAUGH.

The following is an extract from an article by Rene Bache, published in a recent issue of our venerable contemporary, the Saturday Evening Post:

Forty thousand acres of glass in the neighborhood of Boston alone are now devoted to the forcing of vegetables, in order that a privileged and luxurious class may have celery, lettuce, tomatoes, cauliflower and cucumbers in winter. By the adoption of ingenious, yet simple, expedients, an artificial summer is maintained all the year around, and even the climate of the tropics is counterfeited for the growing of products belonging to hot latitudes. In such ways no less than $5,000,000 worth of table delicacies is raised for market in this country annually, no price being deemed too high to pay for dainties that are out of season.

Thus lettuce is grown in the south in "cold frames," to meet the Christmas demand, and the gardener, when this crop has been gathered, starts egg plants under glass sashes. Electric lettuce, forced under arc lights, is raised on a considerable scale near Boston, the plants being compelled by this means to work night and day. It may be a hardship for them, but when the product fetches $3 a dozen heads a poor vegetable has no rights that the commercial horticulturist feels bound to respect. Hothouse lettuce supplements the cold-frame output, and thus the delicacy, green and crisp, is obtainable in any month of the year.

Winter cucumbers are grown on overhead trellises, being made almost seedless by restricting the stock in a greenhouse to a single variety, to prevent cross-fertilization, and tomatoes are ingeniously manipulated by cutting the plants down and removing all but a certain number of fruits, which not only attain extraordinary size and juiciness, but ripen considerably ahead of time. Such tomatoes fetch 40 cents a pound, but they are worth it, considering the fact that they may be purchased all through the season when outdoor ones are unobtainable.

The earliest cantaloupes are from New Orleans and fetch $1.50 each. Twice that price is paid sometimes for cantaloupes grown on trellises, each individual fruit being suspended in a sort of sling, with a piece of board a foot square to rest upon, so that it cannot suffer defilement by contact with the earth.

Shades of Benjamin Franklin! What tommy-rot! And what a lot of glass in the neighborhood of Boston. Forty thousand acres is 1,742,400,000 square feet. The census of 1900 discovered in the whole United States a total glass area of but 96,230,420 square feet (2,209 acres) devoted to cut flowers, plants and vegetables. This is only one-eighteenth of what Mr. Bache attributes to vegetables alone in the neighborhood of Boston!

Upper Sandusky, O.—S. O. Streby says the summer season has been about as usual, and that prospects are for better trade than ever this fall and winter.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., E. W. Kirkpatrick, McKinney, Tex.; Vice-Pres., C. L. Watrous, Des Moines; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 29th annual convention will be held at West Baden, Ind., June, 1905.

A sketch of the life of the late Jacob Warren Manning has been reprinted in neat pamphlet form from the "Massachusetts Edition of the American Series of Popular Biographies."

A summary of the new postoffice ruling under which catalogues may now be mailed in quantities of not less than 2,000 identical pieces without stamps affixed will be found on page 910 of this issue.

A European nurseryman states, in a catalogue just to hand, that "at the prices quoted we send out good stuff, not fragments of plants," which is on a par with the assertion of a western nurseryman whose catalogue declares that "no plants shipped by mail; we do not deal in microscopic specimens."

AMERICAN PEONY SOCIETY.

FROM OUR ENGLISH EXCHANGES.

The Gardeners' Chronicle.

A ROSE-COLORED hybrid astilbe has been exhibited by Van Waveren & Kruijff, Haarlem, Holland, and has received much notice.

SINNINGIA REGINA.—This species was exhibited last year at the Ghent quinquennial show as Gesneria regina, by M. De Smet-Duvivier, from whom a plant was purchased for Kew, where it flowered in April and May, 1904. From the most cursory glance it was obvious that the plant was not a gesneria, and on examination it proved to be a sinningia (gloxinia of gardens), allied to S. discolor and S. Menziesiana. S. regina is reported to have been introduced with a cattleya from Brazil, but until this is confirmed by properly authenticated wild specimens, the possibility of a hybrid origin cannot altogether be excluded. Sinningia regina is a strikingly handsome plant, about nine inches high, with dark green, velvety leaves, purple on their under surface. The flowers are pale violet and drooping, and are borne on long flower-stalks, four to six together in the axil of each leaf; as two successive pairs of leaves are usually close together on the stem, the effect is that of two many-flowered whorls, and is very fine. The duration of the flowering period is about six weeks, so that this plant is likely to become a favorite. The stock has recently been acquired by Ernst Benary, Erfurt, Germany.

The Kentucky Tobacco Product Co., the manufacturer of the old and well-known Rose Leaf tobacco extract, is preparing to put another insecticide on the market. This is a tobacco-paper and has been given a thorough trial by some large growers, whose endorsement leads to the decision to push the new fumigant, which has been given the name of "Nico-fume."

PIERRE, S. D.—Enoe & Barney have completed their greenhouse, received their stock and are ready for business.

MCHENRY, ILL.—John F. Miller has added 3,500 feet of glass and is installing a thirty-five horse-power steam boiler. He expects to do more business than ever this season. Stock is good.

AURORA, ILL.—J. H. Newhall and John Brick, who have been connected with the Aurora Nursery Co., will go into business as the Aurora Greenhouse Co. They will proceed at once with the erection of about 5,000 feet of glass, which they expect to extend in the spring.

The First Steps!

"I have several times been consulted by those who would make a beginning in the Florists' business. In each case I have said that the first step is to subscribe for a Trade Paper, and the next to procure a copy of The Florists' Manual."

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

The past week's business was very regular, with a heavy demand for Beauties, valley and the better grades of roses and asters. The poorer grades had no call. A killing frost September 21 destroyed nearly all the asters, gladioli, cosmos, dahlias, etc., but with carnations and chrysanthemums coming in their shortage will not be felt.

The quality of roses is rapidly improving. Very little mildewed stock is in evidence but short-stemmed roses are abundant and are bought at one's own figure. American Beauty roses are fine and many more of the better grades could be sold. The demand for Harrisii and longiflorum lilies is heavy. There are not nearly enough to go around. Among the best carnations arriving now are Enchantress, Joost and Flora Hill. Great quantities of short-stemmed white (outdoor stock) find their way to the dump. Reports in general indicate that chrysanthemums will be of excellent quality and very plentiful in this section.

Various Notes.

I spent a day at Bakerstown recently. The place of the Pittsburg Rose & Carnation Co. is in the usual pink of condition. All stock has been planted for some time and the plants look very promising. About 40,000 chrysanthemums grown at this place are as fine as one could wish to see. They cut their first Bergmann early last week. Roses and carnations are made a specialty and they produce the gilt-edged stock, too. Their roses are all grafted stock.

The first shipment of carnations from M. C. Dunlevy & Sons was received last week; the blooms were fine.

Randolph & McClements were kept busy with several decorations last week and considerable funeral work last Saturday and Sunday.

F. Breitenbaugh & Bro., who are the largest growers of fuchsias in this vicinity, have their place in tip-top shape and the prospects for a heavy cut of roses and chrysanthemums is good. John said his Little Beauty fuchsia is holding its own, with an increase of sale each year.

G. & J. W. Ludwig furnished the bulbs and seeds for the Allegheny city park system. The contract was a good one.

Wm. Loew, our local "green goods" man, has returned from his annual trip among the mountains of Virginia, West Virginia and Maryland.

Wm. Flemm has returned from New York.

Mrs. E. A. Williams, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Clarke, John Bader, and Miss Mary Bader returned last Monday from St. Louis with the Knights Templar.

Mr. and Mrs. B. L. Elliott are home again from their cruise along the New England coast.

The store rooms of T. M. Ulam & Co., Pittsburg Cut Flower Co., Geddis & Blind Bros., and Breitenstein & Flemm are receiving their usual autumn coat of paint. Hoo-Hoo.

PROPAGATING HOUSE.

Our potting shed runs east and west. Our greenhouses extend south from the potting shed. Can you advise us as to the best place to construct a propagating house, on the north of the potting shed or on the east, south or west of the greenhouses? T. S. C.

As your potting shed runs east and west and your houses run south from it, we would say there is no question where the propagating house should be, viz., running south from the shed and parallel to your east house. If easy to make a good substantial gutter, then it might be attached to the east house. If not handy to do that, then keep it away a few feet.

Although not asked for, allow me to say that an equal span house eleven feet wide makes an ideal propagating house, with all the pipes beneath the boarded-up bench. One side is used for propagating, the other for the potted-off stuff for the first two weeks after potting. A 12-inch board on each side should be hinged to either swing up or down in cold weather to give heat to the house. In mild weather you need no top heat and little fire. W. S.

PACIFIC COAST.

CLIMATIC CONDITIONS.

There is nothing quite as important to the nurseryman in California as the season's rainfall. With us our selling season does not begin until after the first good rain, which generally falls about the middle of November. This rule held good for a great many years, but for the past few seasons we have not had the same climatic conditions as before, and as a consequence considerable loss was entailed, both on the buyer and seller. When I say our seasons seem to be changing somewhat, I make a broad assertion, but anyone who has been as vitally interested as are the nurserymen and florists of this locality cannot have failed to note it. This summer, as well as the two previous summers, we hardly saw the sun at all during the months of May, June and July. We had very warm weather during April, and our hottest days were in the early part of September, and now that we are toward the end of that month, it is raining heavily, something entirely out of the ordinary, for our rainy season should not begin for two months yet.

Now the effect on business: Our trade in California usually commences about December 1, and the bulk of it is over by April 1. After that we have about a month that we devote to the planting of soft stuff and annuals. Last December was dry and cold and early in the year it commenced to rain. We had a deluge during the months of February and March, the time we should be very busy shipping orders, but we could not dig and our customers could not plant, and the first thing we knew it was the first of April and before we knew it deciduous stock had leaved out so much that it could no longer be handled. Many of our nurserymen had large orders they were unable to deliver, and considerable financial loss was the result.

These conditions do not apply to southern or northern California, where the climates are very different, but in the vicinity of San Francisco several of our late seasons have been "corkers," for at the longest our selling season is not over five months in length, and when we miss a couple of months' sales on account of our weather we have to wait a whole year before things can come our way again. G.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

We have had quite a shower this week, something very unusual for this season of the year, but it is a welcome change from the extreme heat of a fortnight ago. Flowers are not plentiful. Carnations are in the midst of their resting season and good stock of all kinds is rather scarce. Roses, what few are shown in the windows, are of good color and stem, and the dark, cloudy weather of the last week has had a very beneficial effect on them. Bridesmaids are about the best that are offered, and they wholesale at from 50 cents to 75 cents per dozen. In whites we have some good Brides that are selling at the same price, and a few Kaiserin. Lilium rubrum and album have about disappeared, and longiflorums are being offered in small lots at from $2 to $2.50 per dozen. Indoor chrysanthemums show the effects of the hot weather. There are only a few outdoor mums in market thus far, but within the week there will be an abundance. Sweet peas are passing very rapidly. Valley is plentiful and smilax is becoming longer on the string and of firmer quality.

Business, in spite of the fact that we have just finished with the Knights Templar conclave and are now in the midst of the Odd Fellows' encampment, is quiet, although we have had more than the usual amount of funeral work during the past two weeks. I think in a week or two we will drop into our regular fall business, however, and things in the florist line will appear much brighter.

Various Notes.

The Cox Seed Co. has received a large consignment of araucarias and tree ferns from Australia.

J. T. Sheppard, of Oakland, has placed his store in charge of his daughter and identified himself with an electrical company.

J. Goldstone reports a heavy funeral trade for the past two weeks.

The Shanahan Floral Co. had considerable decorating for the Odd Fellows' parade this week.

John McLaren, superintendent of Golden Gate park, was called as an expert to determine the value of lands to be purchased by the city of Oakland for a public park. G.

SHASTA DAISY.

Will you kindly advise me through your valuable paper as to the culture of the Shasta daisy? If I sow the seed now and keep them growing will they bloom in March or April next, or do they not stand greenhouse culture? Would it pay to give them greenhouse space? J. E.

As this question comes from Seattle, where the winters are so much milder than our north Atlantic slope, I don't feel so confident about giving good advice. Yet knowing what little I do about the mild climate of Seattle, would say that with seed sown at once and transplanted into permanent beds, they would thrive during your winter and flower in spring and continue to flower for a great part of the summer. In your favored clime, where roses and many other of Flora's gems grow and flower so freely during a long season, the Shasta daisy may not pay to give much glass protection. With us it is in the winter and spring months in our greenhouses that the Shasta daisy is valued. For that purpose we propagate in late spring, carry the plants over summer in pots, shifting as required and let them flower during winter and spring. Coming again to your climate, sown now, winter in a cold frame and plant out in early spring. W. S.

THE READERS' CORNER.

German and Japanese Irises.

In the Review for September 15 appears a query about irises, Japanese and German, concerning which I should like to give an opinion. Japanese irises need damp ground and high feeding and are not the best companions for German irises, which succeed better with drier treatment. They flower magnificently in California, even when baked up from May till October. As to the best time for moving them, Peter Barr once told me that he divided and moved his directly after flowering and I have found the practice very satisfactory here in British Columbia.

Lilies, such as auratum and speciosum, like deep planting, eight to ten inches from the top of the bulb. This gives them a better opportunity to make stem roots and keeps the bulbs and roots away from the hot surface soil. Unless the soil be of a sandy nature it is well to surround the bulbs with sand, thus affording drainage and protection from the attacks of slugs.

CREDIT WHEN DUE.

A wholesale cut flower dealer says that it has come to his attention that the average out of town customer is by no means slow to make complaint whenever he is not satisfied with quality, packing or promptness of a shipment of stock, but that the same men are usually very slow to express themselves when they feel that they have been well served; in fact, he says, it never seems to occur that a few words of approval might go much farther than a great deal of blame in getting the kind of goods the buyer wants. Not only do a few words of appreciation serve as an encouragement to greater efforts in the future but they serve to give the shipper a more definite idea of just what character of goods are required to meet the customer's needs.

DES MOINES, IA.—Lozier's greenhouses were in the path of the big storm September 19 and a great deal of glass was broken, the total loss being estimated as above $2,000.

VACANT BENCHES.

I have two vacant benches about five inches deep and head room about two feet in a house where gardenias are growing. I would like to know what to plant for late winter or early spring flowering. L. F. W.

This will depend somewhat on the time that the gardenias are thrown out or removed. If at once, some short-growing carnations, such as Glacier or Estelle, would pay you as well as anything if you could leave them there until the end of June. If the gardenias are planted out it is not likely you can remove them for some time yet and I cannot think of any crop that it would pay to plant on the bench at that late season. Yet there are plenty of things that the bench would be useful for. If the house is warm you could force tulips, Roman hyacinths, narcissi or any of the low-growing bulbs, to be followed in spring by bedding plants. Freesias do finely planted in four inches of soil, but you can force thousands of those in a comparatively small area. You must be guided entirely by what your market demands. W. S.

Death of Mrs. C. A. Birn.

Mrs. C. A. Birn, one of the oldest and best known florists of Nashville, died about 4 o'clock on the morning of September 19 at her residence, 606 Church street. Death was sudden, as she was taken ill only about an hour before the end came.

Mrs. Birn was 59 years of age, and came to this country from Germany in 1871, locating at once in Nashville. For many years she had engaged in the florists' business, and during that period had come in contact with a large number of persons and her acquaintance was very extensive. Surviving her are her husband, Mr. C. A. Birn, and two daughters, Mrs. W. B. Singleton and Miss Eda Birn.

KALAMAZOO, MICH.

A recent visit to the various places in and around this city was one of much pleasure to the writer. Starting at the Dunkley Floral Co.'s, I found this place, as always, in fine shape. Neatness everywhere is the aim of this firm. I noticed a nice lot of mums and a bench of violets which were very promising. Then I took a trip out to S. Batson's, where carnations are a specialty, and Sam certainly has prospects for a very prosperous season. He had his whole range overhauled this summer and everything is very neat. Mr. Batson accompanied me over to the Central Michigan Nurseries, where I was met by Mr. Smith, their foreman. His carnations are very fine, also the mums and roses. The stock shows the hand of a skillful and successful grower. The nursery business is their main hold and the outlook is for a record breaking season.

G. Van Bochove & Bro. have everything in fine shape. Their carnations are very fine, especially Enchantress, Crane and Crocker. Their Beauties are certainly extra, also the teas, which are very strong and showing a fine texture in the foliage. A house of Meteors was a sight, stems thirty to thirty-six inches long. A lot of Nephrolepis Piersoni and Adiantum Croweanum were very fine. Their new foreman, W. Van Peenen, takes pleasure in showing visitors around this up-to-date place. The proprietors, G. and J. R. Van Bochove, are well pleased with the outlook for a very prosperous season.

I visited the new firm, Grofvert & De Smith, and a neater and better laid out place could hardly be found. Their houses, five in number, 13x125, Dietsch patent, are built in the best style, concrete foundations throughout. A fine salesroom and refrigerator of ample space are parts of the equipment. A brick boiler house with a seventy horsepower boiler and a shed 14x100 feet are attached to the north wall of the greenhouses. This firm will make roses and carnations a specialty and will go into the retail business gradually. Mr. Grofvert was employed at G. Van Bochove & Bro.'s and is well known here. Mr. De Smith is a contractor of this city. Mr. Grofvert is a single man as yet, but there are rumors of marriage in the near future with a young lady who calls Mr. De Smith father. Toledo.

NEWPORT, R. I.

The most successful exhibition ever held by the Newport Horticultural Society took place September 20 to 22 in Masonic hall. Owing to the recent severe storm, the display of dahlias was not as large as it would otherwise have been, but everyone here had this season grown dahlias for this show in such quantities that what were exhibited made a good average showing. On the last evening the center of the hall was cleared at 9 o'clock, and from then until the orchestra played "America" at midnight, dancing was thoroughly enjoyed by the largest number of members and their friends we have ever had at an exhibition.

The principal exhibitors and prize winners were: A. S. Meikle, gardener to W. S. Wells; Colin Robertson, gardener to Mrs. Robert Goelet; David McIntosh, gardener to Mrs. C. M. Bell; James Robertson, gardener to Mrs. T. O. Richardson; Samuel Matson, gardener to Mrs. W. H. Osgood; Charles D. Stark, gardener to Mrs. Geo. W. Collard; John Marshall, gardener to Perry Belmont; A. J. Pow, gardener to Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt; James Boyd, gardener to Mrs. Wm. Astor; Gibson Bros., John Mahan, gardener to H. D. Auchincloss; Oscar Schultz, Joseph Gibson, gardener to James Stillman; Alex. Anderson, gardener to Mrs. T. J. Emery; Miss Fadden, J. T. Allan, gardener to J. R. Drexel; Samuel Williams, assistant gardener to Perry Belmont; John Bluck, H. P. Burt, Taunton, Mass.; F. B. Connolly, Mrs. T. O. Richardson, W. G. Postings, gardener to Mrs. Winthrop Chandler; Andrew Christensen, gardener to Miss Fannie Foster; W. S. Wells, M. B. Faxon, J. C. Matley, gardener to J. G. Bennett; C. D. Stark, Jr., S. Speers, gardener to Mrs. W. B. Greene; Jas. Gartley, gardener to H. H. Rogers, and others.

"Superior to any Hot Water Boiler we have ever used. You certainly have placed the right name to your Boilers; no effort at all to keep the temperature at desired points when zero weather comes. Night after night the past severe winter weather gave your Boiler a good test. We are more than pleased with the Superior Boiler." Yours truly, Treaner & Rettic.

Dear Sirs.

Replying to your favor of the 22nd inst. asking us our opinion of your Boilers, we are pleased to state that the Burnham Sectional Boilers have as per filled the bill beyond our expectation.

The quickness of Circulation is admirable and we find them very economical in regard to fuel besides being very easy to clean and easy to run, the latter we proved last winter when, owing to the Coal famine we had to burn soft Coal when contrary to our expectations we had very little trouble

Dear Sirs.

Replying to your favor of the 22nd inst. asking us our opinion of your Boilers, we are pleased to state that the "Burnham Sectional Boilers" have so far filled the bill beyond our expectation.

The quietness of Circulation is admirable and we find them very economical in regard to fuel besides being very easy to Clean and easy to run, the latter we proved last winter when, owing to the Coal famine we had to burn Soft Coal when contrary to our expectations we had very little trouble

Yours truly,

SEASONABLE ADMONITIONS.

Forcing the Blooms.

There is a great temptation just now to rush the flowers along by turning on the heat, because the market is waiting and the demand good. To those who are trying this forcing process I would say, don't. In the first place it is practically impossible to force a chrysanthemum and the flower will develop more quickly in a temperature of 50 degrees than in a temperature of 70 degrees. The sunlight is the only thing that will push the flowers open. Given a touch of frost at night and bright, crisp days, we can run just a crack of heat in the mum house and furnish ideal conditions for the rapid development of the flowers, without any high temperature.

Another reason why I say don't force is because a high temperature is very favorable to the increase of red spider and black and green fly and since one cannot syringe to any extent any more, their presence at this time means a loss of flowers. Fire heat also makes the flowers very soft and liable to be easily bruised, a very undesirable condition when shipping to market.

Red Spider.

If red spider is present in any quantity now you will see it in the bud, and it may be necessary to do some spraying to clean it out. I have several times seen flowers completely spoiled by spider and the grower did not have the faintest idea what had happened to them until too late to remedy the trouble.

Black Fly.

If the flowers are too far open to permit any more fumigating and black fly is present, tie a small piece of aphis punk close up under the flower. The nicotine will clean out every fly in short order if the punk is fresh and that, too, without the least injury to the flower.

Mildew.

Mildew is worse than for some time past. If you have a steam pipe, a little sulphur will remedy that trouble by painting it on the pipe, or the plants may be sprayed with the sulphide of potassium, using it in the proportion of one ounce to a gallon of water.

Feeding.

Feeding should be stopped on any variety as it shows color.

Several people have spoken to me about their plants of Duckham cracking at the neck, just under the bud. In some cases this trouble has been so pronounced that the plant has literally beheaded itself and pushed the bud completely off. Duckham is a very strong grower and, in common with other kinds of a like vigorous constitution, does not need nearly so much feeding as more delicate kinds. If your plants of Duckham are cracking at the neck stop feeding and keep well on the dry side. It must be remembered that growth in the plant has now stopped and all the sap is pumping directly into the bud and feeding calls for the use of discretion. Even an excessive supply of water on a warm day may cause the stem to crack when a plant has such a rooting system as some of the present-day kinds show. Duckham will, as a matter of fact, develop two flowers to a plant just as well as one.

Petals Damping.

If the petals are damping as the flower opens, give a good coat of shading all over the roof of white wash or whiting or mud, anything to break the rays of the sun. It is all very well to talk about sun-proof crimsons, but as a matter of fact we find that almost any variety will burn when we get, as we often do, a bright, cloudless day with the temperature running into the eighties. The mum is a cool growing plant and the high temperatures we get in October are distinctly inimical to the best development of the flower. But we must make the best of our disadvantages. Do not be afraid to shade, and shade heavily, if conditions require it, not only for the crimsons and pinks but for every kind.

Merstham Yellow.

This variety, spoken of last week, was exhibited before the C. S. A. committee October 1 and scored ninety points as an early yellow. It was very fine and a prominent wholesaler remarked in my hearing that he could sell 500 flowers that day at 50 cents each if he could only get them. Next year we will see if he can make good his statement.

BRIAN BORU.

CHRYSANTHEMUM SOCIETY.

The Chrysanthemum Society of America has arranged for the following special prizes to be competed for at the exhibition which opens at Boston November 3:

W. Wells & Co., Earlswood, Surrey, England, offer gold, silver-gilt, and silver medals, three prizes, for six blooms of any of the Wells-Pocket set of 1903, not less than two varieties to be shown. Varieties eligible to compete are: W. Duckham, Maynell, S. T. Wright, Harrison Dick, Leila Filkins, F. A. Cobbold, Donald McLeod, Mrs. T. Longley, Mrs. R. Hunt, Mary Inglis, Hester Edwards, Pantia Ralli, Cheltonii. (He makes this offer through Mr. Wm. Duckham.)

Chas. H. Totty offers $25, $15 and $10 for a vase of twelve flowers of Chrysanthemum W. Duckham.

A. Herrington offers $6 and $4 for a vase of six blooms of any chrysanthemum.

C. S. A. offers three prizes, $25, $15 and $10, for twenty-four blooms in twenty-four varieties, on 15-inch stems.

The E. G. Hill Co. offers a silver vase, to be known as The E. G. Hill Trophy, value $25, open to private gardeners only, twenty blooms in twenty varieties, one bloom to a vase.

Nathan Smith & Son offer $25 for best twelve white chrysanthemums, American or foreign origin, disseminated in 1904. To be judged from a commercial standpoint, stems not less than thirty inches long, open to private gardeners only.

The C. S. A. offers the C. S. A. silver cup, value $20, for best ten blooms of any chrysanthemum, one variety.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Sweet Alyssum.

Don't forget to plant, along the edge of a carnation bed, some plants of the double sweet alyssum. This pretty little flower is very useful at all times. It gives lightness and relief in designs where flowers of too uniform a size are used. Don't over do it. A plant every three or four feet, close to the edge of the bed, will do no harm. I never noticed that the carnation plant nearest the sweet alyssum was less vigorous than one in the middle of the bed.

To Get Good Fuchsias.

We don't see fuchsias grown as well nowadays as they were some thirty years ago, and we see an attempt at growing them very near home that are complete rubbish. They are not a success as a flower-garden plant; our warm summers are not what suits them. Yet there is a large sale for them in the spring for window plants. The failure to grow strong, healthy plants is because at the end of the selling season a few late-propagated runts are carried along, most likely indoors. The wood is never ripened and never will give strong cuttings. If you did as you should and saved a plant or two of each variety from the largest and strongest plants you had early last spring and plunged them outdoors during summer, they will now be ripening.

Don't be afraid of a few degrees of frost. It will kill the leaves but won't hurt the wood. Then bring them in and lay them down beneath a bench in your coolest house, where they need no attention for two months. That's their resting time. Early in December if you want large, early plants, get them up, shake off the old soil, cut back the weak growth and start growing and you will get strong cuttings that will make vigorous plants.

Plants raised from these ripened, dormant fuchsias will want to grow and not flower so precociously as does the weak little stuff struck from a plant that had no rest. The writer can look back on the days when we grew fuchsias thirty inches high and two feet wide at the base, full of flowers in the month of April, and sold them for $3 each, retail. And a fuchsia is still a fuchsia.

Carnations in Pots.

There is always a call in the spring for carnations in pots. Our customers want them for their gardens. The business man who can pick a carnation out of his own garden and walk down the street adorned, thinks the flower quite as large and twice as beautiful as one he buys of the florist. Thousands of plants could be sold for a good price in every city if they could be had. Perhaps it should have been done two weeks ago, but it is not yet too late. Lift plants from the field that you considered too small to bench. Pot into 5-inch pots and plunge in a sound cold-frame. Of course you will cover with glass and shade for a week or two and after that, if the weather is favorable, remove the sash whenever you can, because you want them to go through the winter in this frame. Double sash is a great protection in cold weather. You need not lose ten per cent of them and they make early and very satisfactory flowering plants for the garden if planted out about the middle of May.

Another plan to fill this want is to root some cuttings at once, and carnations root quickly and surely now. Grow them on all winter and you can by May have plants in 3½-inch or 4-inch pots with several shoots. These may flower longer in the garden than the old plants wintered over, but they will not please your customer as well, as he or she does not want to wait until August for flowers. Besides they have cost you coal and labor, more than the cold-frame plants.

A Retrospect.

While dipping into another man's department I must again be slightly reminiscent. Where are the carnations in pots, in bud and bloom, that we used to grow and sell in January and on to spring? It seems to me they could be easily grown for Christmas; not in pots all summer, never, not with the greatest of care. They must be lifted from the field. We have lifted them as late as the middle of October and had them in fine shape by February. Of course, you could get some flowers long before that, but for a pot plant you want a big show of bloom at one time. Please excuse me, but in the days when we dug up, potted, watered and tied our plants with our own hands, we have sold at $25 per 100, La Purite carnation plants in 6-inch pots with sixty to seventy open flowers and buds. I think that was the winter after the panic of '73. Nevertheless it's a fact. It's true that La Purite, carmine, and Edwardsii and President Degraw were very free-flowering kinds and had no such length of stem as our present varieties, yet it strongly appeals to me that we have varieties just as suitable for pot culture as those old pioneers. Lawson would be grand for the purpose and so would Estelle and Galcier, and there may be many of the splendid new varieties that would make a good compact plant.

John Thorpe, at Indianapolis, suggested that a prize should be offered for pot plants. Nothing came of it. Can you think of anything that would sell much better than a well-flowered carnation plant? There is nothing to it but to try by stopping early flowering stems to get a full crop of flowers at one time.

Propagating Summer Roses.

This is an excellent time to put into the sand a big batch of Maman Cochet, President Carnot, Kaiserin, Etoile de Lyon or any of this class of summer-flowering roses. As is well known, Cochet, pink and white, is queen of them all, because it grows and flowers so splendidly all summer long, and now, when the cool nights are here, it is giving us grand flowers. They root easily in the sand, with or without any fire heat, but by the time you pot them off you will have fires going and a warm bench should be given them until they have made roots. After that they will winter in any cool house.

Put in a lot, especially of Cochet, for your own use. Plant them out in spring in beds where they can be given copious watering and you will have fine rose buds when those in the house are thrown out. Kaiserin Augusta Victoria (what a name) is, we think, indispensable for summer cutting under glass and a bed in a foot of soil will last for years. If you have to make a new bed, these fall-struck cuttings, grown on cool, are just the thing.

Cyclamen.

Cyclamen, whether grown in frames or indoors all summer, should now be in their flowering pots and on the bench where they are to bloom. No sun will hurt them now. Never let them be neglected for water. Give them plenty of space between plants. On bright mornings spray them and let there be lots of tobacco stems between the pots.

William Scott.

ROSES

LIQUID MANURE.

As the bushes increase in strength and crops approach maturity, the nutriment in the soil will be more or less exhausted and some provision should be made to supply the deficient elements. As plant food must be reduced to an assimilable state before absorption can take place, the easiest and quickest method is to convert it into a liquid. The best and safest material for this purpose is fresh cow manure, which contains nearly all the elements of plant food in their proper proportions, and few of the caustic principles so prevalent in chemical preparations, which are so detrimental to roses under glass.

The proper preparation of this material is a very simple process, the apparatus required for the preparation and distribution being simple, inexpensive and easily erected. A tank of sufficient capacity to hold at least as much water as would be required for one application should be constructed and placed convenient to the pump and connected with the water pipes, so that it can be used as a reservoir to distribute from. A smaller tank to be used as a mixer should be built on a higher level, so that the contents can be drained through a screen into the lower tank. The smaller tank should be filled with manure and sufficient water added to start fermentation. After fermentation the liquid should be drained into the reservoir and sufficient water added to reduce it to the strength required.

The first applications should be rather weak, till the plants get accustomed to this class of food, when the strength can be increased to meet the requirements of the plants.

The greatest benefit is derived from this method of feeding if care is taken to apply it only during bright weather and when the crops are at the right stage to use it with effect.

There is great danger of sickening the plants if applied when the soil in the bench is too dry and, of course, common sense will teach us not to saturate the soil by using it when the soil is too wet. If plants are sickly or in a weak growing condition they are in no condition to derive benefit from this form of feeding; in fact, it is the means of aggravating the trouble.

Sheep, pigeon and chicken manure, being of a more concentrated nature, require the exercise of greater caution when used for this purpose. Nitrates and chemical preparations are only safe in the hands of experts and any experiments with these should, as a matter of safety, be limited to a small area. Watchfulness, careful observation and a close study of the attending conditions are absolutely essential to the safe and beneficial use of these compounds.

Ribes.

APPLYING SULPHUR.

Will you inform me of the safest, surest and cheapest method to apply sulphur for mildew on roses, in houses heated by hot water? J. V. L.

Take two parts sulphur and one part finely screened air-slaked lime and add as much water as will bring it to the consistency of thick paint. Mix well and apply to the pipes with a brush at spaces a yard or so apart. Close the ventilators tightly for a couple of hours during the coldest part of the night, when the pipes are hottest. When the pipes exceed 90 degrees temperature sufficient fumes will be released to effect the purpose. This ought to be repeated at least once a week till the pest disappears. RIBES.

ETOILE DE FRANCE.

The popularity which has come to Mme. Chatenay is having an appreciable effect in the interest taken in the new French rose, Etoile de France, which is to be distributed this fall by J. Pernet-Ducher. It is a seedling of Chatenay and Fisher Holmes, a fine red in color and said to be a very free bloomer and easy to handle under glass. As the idiosyncracies of Liberty have not yet become generally mastered, many American rose growers hope to find in this new candidate a successful rival of that variety and one which all can grow. The accompanying illustration is from a photograph supplied by the originator.

The New Red Forcing Rose, Etoile de France.

WITH BOSTON GROWERS.

Waban Rose Conservatories, Natick, Mass.

The largest producers of the queen of flowers in New England are the Waban Rose Conservatories in South Natick, Mass., and it is needless to add that if the quantity is great, the quality is of the highest. The Boston market is a critical one; it demands high grade flowers and the growers who produce such are the most prosperous. The quality of roses raised at the Waban factory is second to none in America. This is not at all surprising, seeing that the manager for many years of this big plant is Alexander Montgomery, the highly respected president of the American Rose Society, a genial, unassuming man, but without a peer as a rose grower on this continent.

While the latter part of September is hardly so interesting a time to visit this establishment as later in the season, when the quality of rose blooms is higher, there is plenty to profitably occupy one's attention at any season of the year. We were very favorably impressed with the latest and largest house erected. This is an even span, 40x700, twenty-four feet to the ridge. It contains 13,000 plants of American Beauty, all in superb health. After visiting numerous other houses of varying dimensions we had to confess that the big Beauty house was our favorite. The temperature was very even and the ridge sufficiently high to cast no shade. We asked Mr. Montgomery if they had any trouble in maintaining a proper temperature during the late severe winter. He stated that on visiting the house after midnight on the coldest night of the winter, with an outside temperature of 30 degrees below zero, four thermometers in the house gave the same reading; viz., 59 degrees. At six feet from the ridge there was not even a difference of half a degree, which would seem to explode a popular fallacy about houses being made warmer nearer the ridge. On the coldest nights eighteen lines of steam pipes were used. In each of two nearby houses 20x700 it was necessary to use twelve lines of pipe to maintain a night temperature of 56 degrees. In addition to the saving in fuel, the larger house contains 7,000 less square feet of glass surface which makes it evident that large houses are more economical to build and maintain than an equal area in smaller ones.

The other two 700-foot houses are planted with Brides and Bridesmaids. Of these 50,000 are grown. Both in these houses and in a number of others they were in first-class condition. Mrs. Pierpont Morgan fills many of the front benches in the various houses. Plants seven years old were just as vigorous as younger ones. A smaller stock of Mrs. Oliver Ames is grown. Liberty fills several houses and in its color is considered far the best, always selling well. One house is devoted to Golden Gate and Ivory. Mr. Montgomery stated that there was a very limited sale for these in the Boston market. A house 300 feet in length is planted with a Waban seedling, in the way of La Detroit, but thought to be a better thing, for a small portion of a bench containing La Detroit was far outclassed by the new seedling, which is not yet named. It sells well in the Boston market, will be shown at the coming chrysanthemum show and will be introduced if the public demands it.

A number of the oldest houses are planted with Kaiserin and Carnot, which were yielding a magnificent cut of bloom. What a contrast between these houses, which were the finest in their day and the modern giants near by!

Mr. Montgomery, Jr., has a good many seedling roses under trial of his own raising. He is just as keen a rosarian as his father, so the future of the Waban greenhouses seems to be assured.

While roses are the principal feature here, one or two other crops are grown. Asparagus plumosus nanus fills two large houses and looks particularly well. Chrysanthemums are still grown to some extent, about 7,000 single stems being planted this season. These are not to be confounded with the average florist's stock, but are carrying stems like walking sticks, with heavy, leathery foliage and buds denoting some mammoth blooms later. Flowers from Waban always command the highest prices in Boston and for many years swept the decks at the exhibitions. We doubt not but that they will be to the fore at the coming meeting of the C. S. A. Some of the popular varieties grown here are Duckham, Appleton, Shrimpton, Eaton, Bonnaffon, Maud Dean, Merza and Mrs. Jerome Jones. The last named is considered the best money-maker of the lot. In regard to Merza, Mr. Montgomery stated that it should be cut, the bottom of the stems split and kept in cold water at least forty-eight hours before shipping and there would then be no complaint about its not keeping well.

One house is devoted to lily of the valley. Of this 600,000 are annually forced. A model cold storage house holds that number of pips, a uniform temperature of 24 degrees being maintained. It can be kept much cooler if necessary, 13 degrees below zero having been secured on a trial test.

The annual consumption of coal for the Waban plant of some 300,000 feet of glass is about 2,000 tons. This season, instead of using soft coal exclusively, additional strong draughts have proved that a mixture of five-sixths pea coal and one-sixth soft coal gives very gratifying results. So hot is the fire from this fuel that it has been necessary to lengthen the pokers for the firemen. The heating qualities are so satisfactory that it will not be necessary to use so many boilers as a year ago. The capacity of the steam boilers varies from 100 to 175 horse-power. The boiler-room is a model of neatness, as, indeed, is every part of this establishment and a tour of inspection under the genial guidance of Mr. Montgomery is as pleasurable as it is profitable. W. HAIL IN NEBRASKA.

The accompanying illustration shows a part of the establishment of Brewster & Williams, Grand Island, Neb., as it looked just after a heavy hail storm had passed over their place a few weeks ago. Not only did they lose over 5,000 square feet of glass but the plants were badly cut up, both those in the field and in the benches. The glass was insured with the Florists' Hail Association. Not only has the broken glass been replaced, but 1,400 feet of new glass has been added and the stock is coming on in fine shape.

CARNATIONS

HOW "CROPS" OCCUR.

I am a beginner with carnations and am watching the notes in the Review very closely. I hope you will find space in the near future to tell us young hopefuls about the number of joints we must leave when picking the carnation blooms. What influence has this on the size of the bloom following? How many shoots should an average carnation plant have now and later? Now please do not tell us, as so many advisers do, that "it depends." We know "it depends," but we want to know on what these things depend. J. M. K.

I fear I cannot answer the questions you ask without saying that "it depends," perhaps several times before I finish. But I will endeavor to tell you what depends and upon what it depends, so that you will not be left in the dark.

The number of shoots an average carnation plant should have at this date, to be profitable, must necessarily depend on the variety more than anything else. For instance, a variety which crops into bloom about the middle of November and again about April must necessarily have more shoots now than a variety that will break away as soon as the bloom is cut and keep on throwing up blooming shoots right along. Varieties like White Cloud, Lorna, Governor Wolcott, Floriana, Mrs. Nelson, America, Mrs. Palmer and many others, should now have at least twelve to fifteen blooming shoots ready to run up to bud, while such varieties as Harlowarden, Moonlight, Indianapolis, Mrs. Lawson, and a few others will be profitable if they have eight or ten blooming shoots running up now. Of course some of the plants will have more, but others may have less.

There are many varieties which you must have good large plants to start with if you want to get much out of them during early winter, because they will make one crop (in quantity according to the size of the plants), and then take until spring before coming into crop again. If you can have fifteen good, strong leads to the plant ready to start up now, or a couple of weeks earlier, you will stand a good chance of having a fine crop for Christmas and after that crop will pay you well for the bench-room. But unless you can manage to get a big crop you will find those varieties less profitable than the varieties which branch freely and keep coming all the time.

Of this later kind, if you can get six good blooms to the plant before January 1, you will stand a good chance of coming out ahead. You ought to get at least three times as many blooms from January 1 to July 1 as you have up to the first of the year and on an average they will bring as much per bloom.

Not long ago I read an article from a well-known carnation grower in which he spoke of getting fifteen blooms per plant before January 1. If he can do that he ought to make money, as that would mean at least forty-five blooms per plant from most varieties and figuring the blooms at 2 cents, that would make 90 cents per plant, to say nothing of the cuttings. Another firm a year or two ago praised a variety they possessed because it had produced three blooms per plant up to December 1. I consider the latter a very fair average. A variety which will produce that many blooms per plant by December 1 and be in good shape to continue blooming steadily ought to be profitable if the blooms are of good quality.

Those who are growing the variety Indianapolis will notice that long before the bud is ready to open, several shoots are growing at the base of the stem and, as soon as the bloom is cut, these shoots run up to bud and before all the buds of the first crop have opened these shoots are showing the buds, in that way keeping up a succession of bloom through the entire season. Mrs. Lawson does the same thing, only not so pronounced and the breaks are higher up on the stem unless these are removed in order to encourage the lower ones to start.

Some other varieties will not show a sign of a break until the bloom is cut. As there is a heavy crop of buds growing, they take up all the strength the plant has and the young breaks come very slowly until the crop is off and then a whole new crop starts to grow at once. Until these shoots run up to flower there are no blooms to speak of. Some growers say that you can overcome this by topping back part of the shoots as the crop runs up, but you will find that it is seldom very successful and I doubt if the sacrificing of four or five blooms to the plant out of this winter crop is not greater than what is gained by it on such varieties.

No iron-clad rule can be laid down as to how many shoots should be allowed to remain when the bloom is cut. One variety may start only two good shoots while another may start four and the four will make just as strong growth and as large blooms as the first named two. It is the difference in varieties. When disbudding varieties which start the shoots early you should take off all the young shoots down to where they are strong and the stem is heavy and strong. Try to keep the plant as compact as you can. When cutting blooms from varieties which do not break so readily bear the same thing in mind and cut the stem down to where the shoots will be strong.

I do not think that the number of shoots a plant has will have much effect on the quality of the blooms as long as the shoots start from good strong stems. A plant which is strong and sturdy will nourish to perfection all the shoots that can start from the main body of the plant and are in position to draw their strength through the main channels, providing, of course, that the plant is well established and the roots are in good working condition and well fed.

JOOST AND QUEEN LOUISE.

I enclose some foliage from my Joost and Queen Louise carnations. They were housed from the field July 25 in apparently good condition. Just previous to benching I shaded the glass with whitewash, which I scrubbed off about three weeks later. Do you think I shaded too heavily? I noticed some rust and have given three applications of blue stone through a syringe, diluted to one one-thousandth. Can you tell the trouble with these plants and the remedy? J. P. K.

There is nothing to be alarmed about. Perhaps you left your shade too dense for a few days longer than was advisable, but I am inclined to think that you watered a little too liberally before they had the full sun and before the roots were in good working order. Mrs. Joost is one of the quickest varieties to show it in this way; in fact, it is inclined to make this kind of growth after any kind of a severe check unless they are handled carefully after the check occurs. The Queen Louise seems to be affected less, but in the same way. Keep them a little on the dry side and give all the air and sunshine you can and you will find the trouble will disappear in a short time.

MAKING LIQUID MANURE.

This is the time of year that liquid manure begins to be something of a problem to chrysanthemum growers and later on the rose growers will be concerned with the question of making and properly applying liquid stimulant. Therefore I think many growers will be interested in the system we have in use on our place and which we find to be the best of which we know. Nothing is, to my mind, more unsightly than to come into an otherwise well-kept greenhouse and see several barrels of liquid manure standing at the ends of the walks. There is almost sure to be some leakage and anyway more or less odor, which is very bad business for one who sells his product at the greenhouses and therefore has numerous lady visitors. But to cut this rather lengthy introduction short and get down to business:

At the rear end of our range of eight houses we dug a pit ten feet long, six feet wide and eight feet deep. Right beside this, or rather at one end and connected with it, we dug another pit eight feet long and six feet wide, but only four feet deep. We bricked up both pits and finished the walls and bottoms with the best Portland cement. At the same time we built a brick wall nine inches thick, up to the ground level to divide the shallow pit from the deep one. At the bottom of the smaller pit, and communicating with the large one, four holes each four inches square were left. These were covered with wire cloth, the heavy kind that is used for coal screens. The water pipe from the greenhouse was run out over the small pit. By putting a wagon load of good cow manure in the small pit and turning on the water we soon had a fine article of liquid fertilizer in the deeper pit, free from all straw, etc.

I then bought a good second-hand, double-action force pump with a 1-inch discharge. The feed pipe is at the bottom of the tank of fertilizer. The discharge is connected with the regular water pipes. Now, for applying the liquid, I go to the valve and turn the water off from the houses; then I open the cock connecting the pump with the water piping. The usual hose is attached to the ordinary hydrants around the houses, a man is put at the pump and we go ahead. The result is that with two men you can apply liquid manure to twice the bench space in half the time and do it thoroughly, giving an even amount and without slopping. You can have the fertilizer in any house where you have water. When through, we close the valve between the pump and the piping, turn on the city water again and open the spigot over the smaller pit, which flushes out the pipes and replenishes the supply of fertilizer. If water was expensive we could wait to catch rain in the gutters and so fill the tank.

The system could be made any size, to suit any range of glass. We have our pits covered with a shed large enough to permit of storing several loads of manure. There are also a couple of steam pipes to prevent freezing in winter. This system is worth to any florist more than the small amount of money it costs. We would as soon think of giving up our steam plant and going back to brick flues as to give up our liquid manure apparatus and go back to the barrel system. F. E. Cremer.

IRON VS. WOODEN GREENHOUSES.

[An abstract of a paper by Robert W. King, of Toronto, Ont., and North Tonawanda, N. Y., read at the convention of the Canadian Horticultural Association, at Ottawa, Ont.]

All improvements are accessories to the best success, but if a man is so built that he cannot grasp them, they are of no benefit. This applies to more than the houses: For instance, improved systems of heating; boilers and economizers placed above ground instead of in a cellar; a pump to return the condensed water rather than gravity; ventilating machinery rather than a stick, or automatic ventilation rather than hand machines; automatic stokers and coal and ash handling machinery rather than the old muscles and a shovel. As to the benefit of all these, one may as well ask what use a piano is in the house of a man where nobody can play it. Some may look upon it as an ornament and with pride, and in this way it adds to the sum total of human happiness. After all, of what use is your money, if you are blessed with having any, if you cannot buy things you fancy and you like and take a pride in having them? The very pride you take in your up-to-date greenhouses and equipment is a stimulant to your success. Pride is a good thing; it helps to keep a man clean. Pride in your houses will help you to keep them clean, too, and clean houses are a benefit to the florist.

Let us take another view: Why in a greenhouse is iron better than wood? Because iron harbors no insects, and wood does. Iron is attacked by chemical action only, causing it to rust away. This is prevented, or should be, by paint. At the same time that paint is a necessity for other reasons (light) and pays its own way. In structural parts that can not be painted, avoid iron. Use concrete tile, etc., where practical. This is the modern trend. Wood is akin to our own bodies; it deteriorates from diseases and in unhealthy places dies an early death.

Between the disease germ of the decaying wood of the old wooden houses and the disease germ that attacks the live wood of your plants, when by mistaken treatment or any other cause they become weak and susceptible to disease, there may be a closer relationship than you think, all germs having great reproductive power and their offspring the faculty of changing form and appearance to suit new conditions.

I have a living example of the tendency of wooden greenhouses to harbor injurious insects and disease. In submitting a proposal to build permanent houses, the owner did not want them; he said that in the course of about eight years he found his houses got so lousy that the best thing to do was to pull them down, burn the refuse and build new. I do not say but what he is perfectly right; he seems to be a successful man; but his ideas on this as on other phases of greenhouse work are peculiar as compared with others. That is all I have to say in their favor, but they are his, he owns them and takes a pride in them, and that is, as I said before, a good thing. His pride in this case leads to a very thorough house-cleaning at least once in eight years.

Another aspect is light. Every ray of light let into your houses has its value, I do not care whether it comes from the north, south, east or west. I took a vote on this question from some of the live carnation growers in the west this spring. It was unanimous with those I questioned. One man called his head grower up and asked him which bench he took those prize carnations from. He odds the worst in the house. Another man, with glass in the north wall of a rose house, plants tomatoes and other tall stuff in the north bed because as he says, "You know the north light is no use for roses." This man has excellent tomatoes. It is the light that counts. Let it in, and this can be done more fully with iron construction than with wood.

Another aspect is expense. It is said, or granted, that iron is cheaper in the long run, but what about the immediate present with a slim purse? Well, I have an old drawing and specification here for a wooden greenhouse. The house is twenty feet wide, with raised wooden benches, the foundation cedar posts. The specification ends: "a house of this kind would cost here (Ontario) about $8.00 per foot, probably a little more, heating and everything included." Eight dollars a foot for a twenty-foot house is equal to 40 cents per square foot of ground covered. Our experience is that you can put up the most modern greenhouse to-day, including permanent tile beds or benches, with heating, ventilation and everything else included, ready to plant, for about 45 cents per square foot of ground covered, including power house, sheds and all such accesories. My hearers may form their own conclusions.

An examination of this old plan opens an interesting question. Have the gardeners themselves kept pace with the other improvements? It is not comparatively so in other walks of life. It has been the saying in other trades that we are not raising enough apprentices, that we are not making mechanics any more, to take the places of those who are dropping out. The old-time millwright who could build a mill from top to bottom, including his engine and boiler, or his dams and water wheels, and run the whole business when through, is a thing of the past. Then it took seven years to learn a trade, now about two weeks immediate experience at one little branch on the outside of the tree of knowledge and the same pay is demanded though the trunk over and from which the other pointed to the north bench of the house. The house was even span, with glass on all sides down to the level of the beds. Another man had a wooden wall on the north side of an even-span house. In this case the north bench was by long has laboriously climbed for those seven years may never have been seen by him. How is it that when that house was designed you could build an eight-foot bench, put in eight rows of plants, and hire a first-class gardener to work it for half the pay that you can get a man for to-day to work a four-foot bench? My last experience is that four rows of plants is claimed to be too much; they have got to be "staggered," reducing the bench to three rows and a half, with three benches to a twenty-two-foot house.

Gentlemen, I am no gardener, but I can put a few figures together, and what they tell me is this: That if to-day you have got to build a twenty-two-foot house to cover ten and a half rows of plants where, in the past, a twenty-foot house would cover sixteen rows, you have a handicap of forty per cent in area in growing space to glass that you have had to pay for and have to keep heated. I would like this question ventilated for the good of the craft, since it affects the build of my houses and the recommendations I make to my clients. I have questioned a good many of the old growers who still stick to the wider benches and say that they raise just as much bloom and as good in the center rows as any other, and that whether the frame of the house is iron or wood it makes no difference, so if the question is solved on a profit or loss basis, then I want just as many plants in my iron house as you have in your wooden structure, and one of the old-style gardeners to run it?

The following suggestions have been received. Since the expansion of the cut flower trade, gardeners have expanded, too, and become so fat that they cannot stoop any more and demand high benches and narrow, or they cannot do the work. They claim, of course, to be able to make up for the loss of space by the superiority of their output, but, honestly, gentlemen, is it so? Are Canadian-grown roses any better to-day than years ago, when the architect of those eight-foot benches first took his flowers to New York, and as some of my American friends say, simply paralyzed the growers there, bringing home to Canada prizes and cups galore? Why, gentlemen, we had such a reputation at that time, not through one man alone, but others as well, some of whom are present here to-day, that I can eye-witness to the fact that the Yankees labeled their best roses "grown in Canada" in order to command our prices!

In support, then, of my contention, I submit that we miss the gardener apprentice whose youthful training over eight-foot benches for seven years has bent and moulded him in form till he can snake his arms through the bushes or hump his back to pick a flower or clean a bush outside the reach of an ordinary mortal.

What is this idea of "staggering" the plants? Have any of you heard of it before? It seems to me that if the rows are kept square across the bench instead of diagonally, as when "staggered," that you have less distance to reach to get at the center plants, the difference being in proportion as the base of a right angle triangle is to one of its sides. To support the plants practically double the wiring is required and a half row of plants lost to each bed. If I am wrong will some one please call me down?

I have followed greenhouse work for sixteen years and consider that in designing a house the first question to settle is the width of beds and walks, then build your house to suit and stick to it. Do not change your ideas before your house is barely up or without the very best of reason for so doing. Remember the proverb that it is the poor workman that finds fault with his tools. Rather let a florist change his ideas to suit his houses than be too ready to change his style of house to suit his ideas. I have told you before about the man who had tried every style of greenhouse extant and found he could grow prize stuff in them all.

THE VAWTER CARNATIONS.

To the followers of our craft who visit California there are few more interesting sights than E. J. Vawter's carnation fields at Ocean Park, not far from Los Angeles and less than a mile from the ocean. Here are twenty acres in carnations, aggregating 100,000 plants from which from 8,000 to 10,000 flowers are cut each day in winter and in the spring from 12,000 to 20,000 daily. There are also five acres of violets which will yield from 1,000 to 1,500 bunches daily from November to May, each bunch containing fifty flowers. Two acres are in roses and three acres in bulbous stock, all grown outdoors summer and winter, although lath houses are in use on the place.

The following story of how these fields came into being will be of interest:

Five years ago Mr. Vawter was approached with a proposition to rent a part of his place that was then being farmed. An outdoor florist contracted for the place, making all his arrangements to start there a carnation field. At the last minute, grown fearful, he refused to sign the contract, and one man's conservatism was again another man's opportunity. Mr. Vawter, who had never had more than an æsthetic interest in flowers, had become interested in the scheme for a garden on his place and determined to carry out the plans himself. Consequently 5,000 cuttings were bought, which, after Mr. Vawter had returned to his farm and harvested a crop of barley from the prospective carnation fields, were duly planted. Today he is selling from 5,000 to 10,000 blooms daily, his principal market being Los Angeles. Mr. Vawter could say with Kipling:

And I took the chances they wouldn't, and now they are calling it luck!

Ocean Park affords an ideal situation for carnation culture. The ground rises gently from the ocean, and on the eastern and the southern slope, protected from the winds, the grade insuring at all times perfect drainage. In the flats beyond are grown lilies, roses and violets, but the carnations are the specialty, the hardiest as the most gratifying, so sure are the returns.

There is a pumping plant at the foot of the hill whence the water is sent up to a tank of 100,000 gallons capacity, then piped over the field.

The plants are all raised from cuttings, are started on the bench, and, as soon as they are rooted, are put in pots and later set out in the ground. After their second season they are thrown away and their place filled by new plants.

A CALL ON JOHN DUNLOP.

Though in these days of mammoth greenhouses Mr. Dunlop's glass at Toronto, Ont., may not cover more than three acres, it has since its beginning been famous for perfect order, cleanliness and neatness, as well as the high quality of its product, more especially roses. The writer recalls the time when the executive committee of the S. A. F. held its meeting at Toronto in February, 1891, not so remote a period, and yet the man who owned 100,000 feet of glass was a big man and there were only a few of him. The committee journeyed out westward to see John's wonderful roses. The street cars took you to within a mile and a half of his houses and then you had to walk through or over brick yards, sand pits, goose commons and other picturesque scenery. Nowadays all this territory is built up with pleasant residences and a speedy trolley car lands you at the front door of Mr. Dunlop's substantial residence.

Here can be seen a dozen houses of carnations planted at various dates, some as early as April, some lifted from the field early in July and others planted as late as the middle of August. Those put on the bench the middle of April, of which there were Lawson, Enchantress and others, looked large, bushy and in the best of health. Yet Mr. Dunlop says this means a sacrifice of at least two months of most profitable cutting and unless you can plant as early as that and get the plants established before very warm weather, he prefers growing them six to seven weeks in the field and lifting early in July. To all of which I most devoutly say amen. Mr. Dunlop believes in giving nearly all the new varieties a trial and then goes heavily into what suits his soil and culture.

Among others he says he has discarded all crimsons but Harlowarden and in scarlet he grows Estelle grandly. Nearly all the carnations are grown in houses which are now his oldest range, built when the short span to the south was the fad. On remarking that I supposed he would build no more like that, he replied, "No, I guess not, but they grow good flowers," and that is verily true, as the writer can testify from frequent visits, seeing both roses and carnations as well done as the best, which all goes to show that the man and his methods have more to do with success than costly structures or up-to-date architecture. Yet that's no reason why the most thorough man should not have the most up-to-date houses, and Mr. Dunlop has them, many of them. There is one style he has not, a remnant of an old style, to be seen in many places yet but considered a relic of the past with nearly all the very large growers, viz., the long span to the south, with all its waste of ground, expensive structure and awkwardness of manipulation.

We were mostly interested in the large blocks of rose houses with the gutters up some seven feet and, of course, no partitions. The pipe (the whole place is steam) runs along the edge of the benches, or rather beds, for there were no raised benches in these rose houses. The walls of the beds were mostly concrete and some seventeen or eighteen inches high. These are not solid beds by any means, as all had ample drainage. I can't see but what this style of range is about as light as outdoors and if you can't grow roses and carnations in them to as near perfection as they can be grown, you must lay the failure to some other cause, not the style of house.

All the roses without exception looked well, not a particle of mildew, and the early planted promising an early and vigorous crop. As with carnations, Mr. Dunlop believes in testing the new varieties. He believes strongly in Mme. Chatenay. Though small plants, he says, when received in mid-summer, they are now making strong two-foot flowering growths.

Mr. Dunlop is a strong and consistent believer in grafting all his tea roses and the beds of Maids and Brides and some late introductions of grafted stock compared with a few hundred of each on their own roots showed a marked strength of growth in favor of the former. Whatever question there is about the cut from these grafted roses the whole season through, there can be no mistake that up to January at least they will give a bigger and a better crop of flowers.

Two large propagating houses pleased me very much, because they are constructed on what we think is just the right principle, not a steam pipe to be seen, but when weather demands it, hinged doors are opened along the sides of the boarded up benches and that is top heat enough. At present large quantities of excellent valley were being cut from these benches.

Altogether this is a model place, run by a strictly business man and everything is produced to supply the firm's fine store on King street. W. S.

CANADIAN CUSTOMS.

A new customs regulation took effect October 1. A new form of invoice is required, of which two copies must be filed. It states, besides the quantity and kind of goods, the fair market price of the goods when sold for consumption at the place from which exported, and the actual selling price to the purchaser in Canada. Attached to the invoice must be the following certificate:

I, the undersigned, do hereby certify as follows:

(1) That I am the exporter of the goods in the within invoice mentioned or described.

(2) That the said invoice is in all respects correct and true.

(3) That the said invoice contains a true and full statement showing the price actually paid or to be paid for the said goods, the actual quantity thereof, and all charges thereon.

(4) That the said invoice also exhibits the fair market value of the said goods at the time and place of their direct exportation to Canada, and as when sold at the same time and place in like quantity and condition for home consumption, in the principal markets of the country whence exported directly to Canada, without any discount or deduction for cash, or on account of any drawback or bounty, or on account of any royalty actually payable thereon or payable thereon when sold for home consumption, but not payable when exported, or on account of the exportation thereof or for any special consideration whatever.

(5) That no different invoice of the goods mentioned in said invoice has been or will be furnished to any one.

(6) That no arrangement or understanding affecting the purchase price of the said goods has been or will be made or entered into between the said exporter and purchaser or by any one on behalf of either of them, either by way of discount, rebate, salary, compensation, or in any manner whatsoever other than as shown in the said invoice.

It will be well for all shippers of goods into Canada to take notice of these new regulations in order to save their customers time and trouble in claiming their goods. J. Gammage & Sons.

SHADING.

Do the following need shading in winter: All kinds of flowering begonias, especially B. rubra; kentias, arecas, chamaerops and crotons, three kinds.

J. R. M.

What are the winter months? We sometimes have fine, mild weather until the first of December and, then again, too often "winter lingers in the lap of spring." We will suppose the inquirer means by winter the months of November to March. If so, then the question is easy to answer.

No, by no means do any of those plants mentioned need any shade whatever during those months and you also might safely include the month of October, with the exception of the arecas. All the palms mentioned can be plunged outdoors during the hottest months of summer if not neglected for water. Crotons make fine foliage beds in the broad sun and too much shade, even in summer, is the curse of most all the flowering begonias.

The writer has more than once expressed his opinion that many florists are too late in removing shade in the fall and too late in applying it in the spring. We have not yet arrived at an inexpensive means of adjustable shading that can be used on a large scale. It will be a blessing when we do. Many plants would be benefited by a shading on bright days in March and greatly impaired by the same shading on wet, dull days in May. W. S.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The early days of October have brought a decided improvement in the tone of the cut flower market. Carnations are getting better. They are firmer in price and in brisk demand, the Flower Market reporting some good shipping orders. Chrysanthemums of excellent quality are coming in more freely. S. S. Pennock received 400 fine blooms on Monday. The varieties are Polly Rose and Glory of Pacific. Edgar & Co. are receiving the former variety, while Wm. Swayne, of Kennett, is sending Mrs. Kalb, white, and Polly Rose to W. J. Baker. Beauties are in demand, but tea roses and valley lag a little.

The departemnt stores are now opening a new set of departments properly decorated. Foliage plants, wild smilax and other greenery, dahlias, cosmos and the last of the hydrangeas, many colored, including the bronze of decay, are the principal materials used. Saturday saw great political activity. The Wm. Graham Co. had a handsome dinner at the Union League at which Beauties, Liberties and other choice flowers were used. Then there were decorations at the Academy of Music, Academy of Fine Arts, the Manufacturers' Club and other places. This week Pennock Bros. decorated Van Sciver's furniture store opening in Camden with wheat, corn, greens and foliage plants, a typical harvest-home decoration. Hugh Graham had decorations at Blum Bros.', the Bingham House and several weddings. J. J. Habermehl's Sons had another decoration at Wanamaker's.

West Grove.

After a short drive, during which the question whether or no Patrick's fidelity to the hitching post should be rewarded by a dinner of oats was finally decided in the affirmative—these corporation men yield so gracefully—the Inn was reached. Here a substantial dinner was fully enjoyed, mine host offering his best cigar by way of cash discount—gladly accepted by Mr. Conner but declined by the pipe-loving Phil—coupled with a cordial invitation to come down in the summer and spend a week.

The rejuvenated Patrick soon brought the buggy to the famous place of the Dingee & Conard Co., where in a substantial office building the visitors found Joseph Lynch, the secretary and manager, who received them most kindly.

The prompt interference of Mr. Conner prevented Phil from seating himself in a capacious scrap basket supposed to be an easy chair and after a short chat the two proceeded to tour the place.

There are seventy houses devoted to roses planted out in benches, grown for propagating exclusively. A fine shed runs the length of the place, the houses opening on it from both sides. Four Ericsson hot air engines keep up a strong pressure of rain water in the pipes. The party were joined by the foreman, Edward Parker, an old acquaintance of the Penrose Nurseries, later with Samuel S. Pennock, who pointed out with pride a shed running at right angles to the main one. It was filled with a few million pots, dizzy numbers, neatly stacked ready for the young rose plants. This shed, but a few years old, has already paid for itself in breakage saved.

The rose plants were in good growing condition, full of breaks, promise of good cuttings in plenty. The method of handling is very interesting. The plants from 2-inch pots are planted out in benches, containing about four inches of soil, at a distance of about twelve inches. From each of these plants an average of one dozen young plants is produced. At the end of six months the parent plants are potted up into 4-inch pots. The benches are cleaned, refilled and another lot of 2-inch roses planted out. So on every six months. The soil in the benches is never used for potting up stock but always thrown out. Some samples of young stock struck this spring were thrifty and full of vigor.

A theory advanced by Mr. Lynch and supported by Mr. Parker, that a single plant of one variety in a bench of some other sort always outgrows the rest, no matter what the varieties may be, was vigorously combatted by Phil. They said it was a fact. The reasons could be surmised but not easily explained. Phil thought these wanderers gained strength by the passing of the cutting knife. No small rose likes to be chopped up. Who can give the true reason?

Outside were great rows of frames with muslin or cheese-cloth covers looking like soldiers' tents at an encampment. These frames were full of young rose cuttings which, though they would be ready for potting before these notes are in the hands of the Review readers, were considered a good risk. The frames appeared to have manure under the sand to give bottom heat, the shading cloth being two or three feet above the glass.

On the way out another trip was taken back to the houses to see the baby rambler, Mme. Norbert Levavasseur, a cross between Crimson Rambler and Glorie de Polyantha. A diminutive plant fit for a 3-inch pot and fifteen blooms. It gives promise of being a dwarf Easter plant of merit. The company is preparing to work up a large stock of it.

After a cordial farewell from their hosts the Philadelphians turned Patrick's head toward Avondale, out over the new macadam road which Mr. Lynch has done so much to secure under the new road law. One dollar for six hours and a half of Patrick's time seemed so good that Mr. Conner added a quarter for a cigar—these Lord & Burnham peo-

The Florists' Club.

The annual meeting of the Florists' Club was held on Tuesday evening. The election of officers resulted in the unanimous choice of John Westcott as president, David Rust vice-president, William Colflesh treasurer, and Edward Lonsdale secretary. After the business meeting a president's reception and entertainment was greatly enjoyed by the members and ladies present. An excellent program of music and recitations by members and others had been prepared. It was prefaced as follows:

In all public bodies it is a maxim of prudence to hold fast to a good officer when such has been discovered. The Florists' Club has been fortunate during its life of some twenty years to have had many faithful and capable servants. The present officers are no exception to the rule, and their re-election for the coming year, without opposition, is a well deserved tribute of esteem and appreciation.

To signalize this event, it has been deemed proper to have a social reunion at the regular monthly meeting, the first Tuesday in October (Oct. 4th), where everybody (ladies included) shall be welcome, and become better acquainted with one another.

This meeting is the beginning of a new year in the club's history, and the celebration will take the place of the usual essay and discussion as the principal event of the evening.

A Rare Bug.

Tenodera Sinensis is the name of a curious looking insect with narrow body and broad, gauzy wings that was caught in the greenhouses of the Wm. Graham Co., at Olney, and placed on exhibition in their window, at Thirteenth street, above Sansom. Through the courtesy of David Beatty it was learned that this insect was of value as a destroyer of caterpillars, two or three furnishing a comfortable meal. Through a local daily the attention of entomologists has been called to this discovery and it has been correctly named as above. A Chicago expert called to see it, and state economic zoologist at Harrisburg. The insect died meanwhile and Mr. Beatty attached it to a card, when it continued to draw crowds of people to the show window. A messenger is coming down from Harrisburg to carry this curiosity safely to the state collection.

Various Notes.

B. Eschner, of the firm of M. Rice & Co., has suffered a great loss in the death of his mother, which occurred last Saturday. Mr. Eschner has the deep sympathy of his many friends.

As the Review goes to press, Riverton is expecting the return of J. D. Eisele from Europe. This flying trip is the first that Mr. Eisele has taken for rest and recreation. It is hoped he will be much benefited by the change and sea air.

W. E. McKissick, of the Leo Niessen Co., states that they are receiving gardenias, also that some nice Maids and Brides are being sent in by G. E. Campbell, of Flourtown.

Charles F. Edgar & Co. are receiving some nice flowers of Polly Rose chrysanthemum.

Jacob Becker and George Carpenter, prominent West Philadelphia growers, went over to Riverton last week to see, as Mr. Becker calmly explained, whether Phil had told the truth.

Paul J. Klinghorn states that his firm, Dumont & Co., is receiving some exceptionally fine Joost, Crocker and Enchantress.

The Floral Exchange sent 20,000 roses, Brides, Maids, Gates, Edgelys and Beauties, during the second half of September to E. Bernheimer.

Achillea, pyrethrum and other small white flowers, rather scarce in the market, are a specialty with C. F. Edgar & Co.

Edward Reid is home again, hard at work packing his extra fine flowers at Flora Hill.

A representative of Wm. J. Baker visited Kennett a few days ago and found Wm. Swayne's carnations and his chrysanthemums in splendid condition.

Joseph P. Johnson, of Hightstown, is sending in fine double violets to the Flower Market.

Albert Woltemate, of Germantown, has been very busy with grading as well as floral work.

Jacob Becker is sending in nice Perles and Ideals to the Leo Niessen Co.

Mrs. S. I. Smith, of Secane, is sending choice single violets to the Flower Market.

Eugene Bernheimer has sent out a wonderful pencil to his friends in the business, a pencil that only a sturdy florist can wield effectively. It is not intended to attach to a watch charm, but might be used as a club in case of need.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The weather the past week was very warm and the cut flower business dragged somewhat. Complaints were general that the trade was not what it was the week previous, during the cold snap which we had at that time. Saturday opened the fourth quarter of the year with brighter prospects, and with cooler weather, which the florists hope will remain with us and make the last quarter of 1904 a profitable one. Out in the west end a number of florists have booked orders for receptions, weddings and dinners for this month. The Veiled Prophet's ball Tuesday night made the demand for choice flowers great, as it always does. American Beauties had the call, with Meteor and Liberty next choice.

The market has plenty of everything, especially roses of the white and pink varieties. Red roses are somewhat scarce. Perle had a great call on Saturday and Sunday, owing to a golden jubilee of one of the largest churches in the city. Choice stock in the smaller roses brings about $6 to $8 per 100. Fancy Beauties are quoted at $4 per dozen. Prices will be somewhat higher this week owing to the big demand for the social affairs on for this week.

Many growers are sending in extra fine blooms of Boston Market, Wolcott, Joost and Enchantress. Most of these bring $3, others from $1.50 to $2 per 100. Prospects for large quantities of carnations of all kinds are very good.

Cosmos is very fine and there is plenty of it at 50 cents per 100. The warm days of last week did the violets no good, as they are still small and shriveled. The price is 25 to 50 cents per 100. Lily of the valley is fine, with fair demand at $3 and $4 per 100. Tuberose stalks are still coming in, but not in as large lots as they have. Large lots of dahlias are in and sell cheap. White and yellow sell the best and all they bring is $2 per 100. All other outdoor stock is over. Smilax is selling well at 15 cents per string. Asparagus Sprengeri has a big call, also adiantum.

Various Notes.

We had with us last week J. E. Killen, representing Wm. Rennie, of Toronto; Judge Vesey, of Fort Wayne, Ind., and Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Canfield, of Springfield, Ill.

Young Mr. Peterson, son of J. A. Peterson, of Cincinnati, is here selling Pandanus Veitchii and Begonia Gloire de Lorraine for Christmas delivery.

Theodore Miller returned home Thursday from his trip to Chicago, Fort Wayne, New Castle and Joliet. He reports royal treatment at all places visited.

C. Young & Sons Co. the past week sold $700 worth of orchids to the Emperor of China. The shipment will be made this week. They are all being packed in glass cases.

The Ellison Floral Co. has had a busy week. The decoration of the Dakota building at the World's Fair was most noteworthy.

Tuesday was horticultural day at the World's Fair and it was a grand affair. The building was tastefully decorated by Mr. Ussic, who is Mr. Hadkinson's right hand man. Mr. Cowee's gladiolus exhibit is still the attraction there. From October 22 to 31 a special exhibition of chrysanthemum blooms will take place. There are twelve classes to be shown. The entries must be in the hands of Superintendent Hadkinson not later than October 19. Quite a few entries are already in and Mr. Hadkinson expects a large display on each of the ten days of the exhibition.

Henry Ostertag has a few large decorations on for this week. Two of the largest will be at Faust's on Tuesday night and the Jefferson hotel on Thursday night.

The Beyers are decorating the Missouri building for Missouri day, which takes place next Tuesday. Other buildings, too, are being decorated for the occasion by this firm.

The New York building at the World's Fair was beautifully decorated for Gov. Odell's grand ball, which took place Tuesday night, and conflicted with the annual Veiled Prophet's ball.

Saturday, October 8, will be Chicago day at the World's Fair and the florists here hope for a large attendance of the craft from that city to spend a day with us. No doubt the Illinois building will be handsomely decorated for the occasion.

The Florists' Club members should not forget to attend the meeting next Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock. President Juengel has some very important business to present. All convention committees are expected to make their final reports. In point of membership and finances the club has never been in better condition and the members should recognize the fact and attend the meetings regularly. The new officers are out to make a record for themselves and the regulars are in line to help them. The trustees will have their list of essays ready for the coming season. The trustees of the club are Fred C. Weber, E. W. Guy and Theodore Miller.

C. Young & Sons Co. decorated the big hall of the Merchants' Exchange for the Veiled Prophet's ball. The decorations exceeded all former efforts in this line. Grand electrical effects were employed and carloads of plants and wild smilax were used.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

Monday was the busiest day this market has seen in many months and conditions are materially better than they were, all along the line. All the country buyers have been heard from regularly for several weeks and now their requirements have assumed considerable size. St. Louis has been a very heavy buyer in the last four or five days and Detroit and Pittsburg have wanted Beauties and choice roses. City trade is also quite large, several large weddings and funerals making a call for much choice stock.

The hot days last week had the effect of bringing on a big cut and a return to frosty temperatures on Sunday caused an even swifter shortening up, so that, with the heaviest demand of the season Monday and the following days found a place in waiting for all good stock. Long Beauties were particularly in demand. Not all small roses are yet free from mildew nor have they all sufficient stem to serve all purposes—but they all found buyers. Chatenay is very abundant but makes a handsome funeral wreath, with adiantum, and is largely used.

The aster is gone and the carnation has fallen heir to its following. There are large receipts of good average quality. Regular requirements have used up all the better grades and the 1000-lot orders, for fall openings, special sales, etc., have cleaned up the "our selection" grade of fair prices.

Chrysanthemums are increasing in numbers but, as demand is strong, quality is not improving very fast; most of them are served quite rare. Violets are not selling well although qualities are good, considering the early date, and prices reasonable. A few shipments from the Hudson river district have already reached this market.

Cosmos is fine and a good seller at three bunches for a dollar. Dahlias are better than heretofore, and selling better also, although not at high prices. "Green goods" are in active demand. Ferns have begun to go up in price.

Various Notes.

The George Wittbold Co. has its decorative stock busily employed down town, this week. They have big decorations up at Field's, Stevens', the Hub and Mandel's and other smaller jobs elsewhere. At Field's they used 500 strings of asparagus. Amling furnished it.

W. J. Smyth had a busy day Tuesday, with two large weddings and the Parmelee funeral, for which he had a large church decoration. For these obsequies the notices read, "please omit flowers," so that the trade in general got nothing from it.

Hugo Schroeter, of Detroit, was in town Saturday, buying stock to be shipped Monday for a big store opening. He wanted a large lot of material, principally long Beauties. He was here just a year ago on the same errand and it is worth recording that the Beauties that were charged at $2.50 last year cost him $3 a dozen this time. He said stock looked good all around the market.

During the week E. E. Pieser, at Kennicott's, has been showing sample blooms of a seedling carnation raised by a son of F. Stielow, at Niles Center. It is cerise pink, large and fringed and everyone thinks well of it.

A. Lange says trade is gradually getting under way but he wants to see good frosty weather. He has quite a trade with out-of-town florists who wire him orders for funeral and other flowers to be delivered in Chicago or the suburbs.

Wietor Bros. are growing a big lot of mums this season and are already getting in a big cut, for the orders call for them.

Ald. and Mrs. Peter Reinberg are at St. Louis for Chicago day.

N. C. Moore & Co. are getting in a big cut of dahlias.

J. D. Pruessner, of Galveston, Tex., was a visitor Monday. He came from St. Louis.

There was another fire in the Atlas block Monday evening but it did the wholesale cut flower people no damage. There are tales, not improbable but not fully verified, of how the florists gathered at the foot of the fire escape, gazing aloft, alert to catch the pretty young woman who was descending from the fifth floor with her firm's ledger in her arms.

BUFFALO.

The Market.

There has been a decided awakening of business during the last two weeks. The folks are home from mountain and sea-shore and social events in society are increasing. Tea roses are yet poor and none too plentiful. American Beauty is in good demand and all that come to town find ready sale. Carnations are just commencing and sell well. Of all the varieties to give you good flowers on good stems at this early date there is none equal to Enchantress. A few chrysanthemums are in the windows. Midge, Monrovia and Fitzwygram are the varieties. I have seen the real Lady Fitzwygram. His lordship is the owner of Leigh Park, in Hampshire, near the great naval station of Portsmouth, where the writer let out his initial squall. I wonder if her ladyship knew how often on this side of the Atlantic her name is taken in vain. In another week the mums will be in abundance, for asters are gone. We know where there are some fine Mrs. T. W. Pockett about fit to cut, but this beautiful yellow should be left until it is perfect.

Various Notes.

I met our aster king, Rudolph Boettger, a few days ago and he said he looks for another good crop of Semple's Branching asters if frost holds off. That speaks well for our climate. Strange to say, while central New York had a terrible frost and we hear of its visit as far south as Baltimore, we have escaped. The weather man reports the lowest in September at 38 degrees, yet in low places frost was felt and, what with winds and rain, there is little left outside. In a ten-mile drive through the truly rural roads of Genesee county, we deplored the fact that thousands of barrels of red cheeked Baldwin apples will rot on the ground because, after paying for a barrel and the labor of picking, there would be nothing left for the poor farmer.

And yet the farmer is not so poor! He generally has health and plenty to eat, clothes sufficient for decency and comfort, rural free mail delivery, telephone for $1 a month, a district school within a mile or two and all beyond this is frills and unnecessaries. Is he not a king compared to the white slave in our crowded cities, paying two prices for everything he eats, drinks and wears and the kids run the streets, and a fourth of his wages is taken for rent?

We noticed the corn scorched with frost and yet occasionally a dahlia in some front yard four or five feet high loaded with pompon flowers. So all together it can be summed up in the beautiful lines of J. Whitcomb Squash:

The frost is on the pumpkin,
The buckwheat's in the shock,
But dahlia's still a bloomin',
Though the corn has got a knock.

Mr. Anderson has entirely gotten over the remodeling of his store and it's now a beauty.

C. H. Keitsch is also in new quarters, a wonderful improvement over the store he vacated.

Byrne Bros. have purchased land in the Williamsville direction and are erecting a range of glass. This, we suppose, is the nucleus of an extensive place, as these young men are workers and will stick to it.

We have not seen many visitors, but the few we did meet might be classed as choice to extra. Mr. Peterson, of Cincinnati, was here and then came "Billy" Craig, of Philadelphia. Each had his order book ready, but they had something else. They each hired a spacious room in a hotel and had samples of what they had to offer. This is an excellent idea, for when you see the palm, fern, pandanus of begonia, it gives you a much better idea what you are buying than any talk of two feet high, seven leaves, etc., etc. There is only one trifling (?) condition to make this system entirely satisfactory to all concerned, especially the buyer, viz., that the order when executed shall be as per sample.

Speaking again of S. A. Anderson, he has filled a very important position for the past two weeks. He is foreman of the grand jury and last week they indicted three aldermen and four ex-aldermen. Of course the offense is the great American specialty, graft on public work.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Conditions have shown a wonderful improvement during the past week, everything clearing out in a satisfactory manner. A few outdoor flowers from sheltered localities continue to dribble in, but they cut no figure in the market. Roses have hardened in prices. On Beauties prices have not varied much, $4 to $25 being still the outside limits, but Brides and Bridesmaids are doing better. While ordinary stock brings $2 to $3, select flowers have sold as high as $8 to $10. Carnations are none too numerous and clear out at advanced prices, the best bringing $3 to $4. Violets are becoming more plentiful. They sell at an average of 50 cents per 100, the only variety seen being Princess of Wales. Lily of the valley remains about the same. Chrysanthemums are a little more plentiful. One grower had some blooms of Ivory on October 1, very early for that variety. Bergmann and Fitzwygram are the leading white. Some of M. B. Girard, crimson, are also seen. Asparagus plumosus holds steady at $50 per 100 strings and 50 cents per bunch. Asparagus Sprengeri is 25 cents a bunch.

Various Notes.

Wm. Sim is sending in 5,000 fine Princess of Wales violets daily to the Park street market and Waban Conservatories are sending some splendid roses.

John Jansky, the Columbus avenue wire design manufacturer, has taken quarters in the basement of the new flower market. Other spaces will be let shortly. The directors of the market report business as very good. One of the new directors, Charles Cummings, having declined to serve, Norris F. Comley was re-elected.

N. F. McCarthy & Co.'s auction sales are now drawing large attendances of buyers. The late frost was needed to interest people in bulbs, trees and shrubs.

The freeze of September 22 was so severe in parts of New Hampshire that plants were frozen in greenhouses with ventilators tightly closed. Of course, we have enjoyed balmy weather since outdoor stock was cut down.

At a meeting of the board of directors of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society on October 1 several new members were elected. An appropriation was made for the committee of arrangements to be used in connection with the visit of the C. S. A. next month. A subcommittee presented a list of suggested appropriations for prizes for 1905. An appropriation was made for the purpose of improving the acoustic properties of the lecture hall.

Charles Sander has had a fine display of nerines in many varieties and Belladonna lilies in bloom at Prof. C. S. Sargent's estate in Brookline lately. Mr. Sander handles these beautiful fall bulbs to perfection.

Very fine displays of plants were made at the Taunton Fair by W. J. Clemson, J. O. Kristenson, gardener, Willard & Williams and Geo. H. Walker, who won prizes for the best display in order named. Each of the two first named exhibitors filled over fifty feet run of staging five feet wide. The display of vegetables at this fair far outclassed that seen in Boston a week previous, being the best seen in Massachusetts.

Violets, chrysanthemums, roses and carnations help to make the stores very attractive now. Plant trade is beginning to pick up.

The seedsmen report a nice demand for bulbs since the September freeze. Quite a number of the flower stores dabble in bulbs to some extent also, to say nothing of the big department stores.

John K. M. L. Farquhar writes that his blooms of Lilium Philippinense carried in fine condition to Europe and have been favorably commented on in the English horticultural papers.

John Barr, of South Natick, grows some 15,000 carnations. He is disappointed with practically all last season's introductions. Fair Maid he thinks highly of, but The Queen is his champion variety and his opinion that it is the best white in sight today is shared by many other growers. Mr. Barr is a first-rate grower of carnations. He has a batch of 500 fine cyclamen coming along, in the culture of which he is a past master.

H. E. Doyle had a pretty church decoration at St. Lawrence's, Brookline, on Sepetmber 28, for the wedding of Miss M. J. Mahoney. The color scheme was green and white, roses and carnations being used in profusion. At the bride's home Beauty roses were used in the dining hall, Brides in the library and Bridesmaids in the other rooms.

Thomas Galvin had a fine lot of Morgan roses in the windows of his Tremont street store the past week. Cattleya labiata and Oncidium varicosum Rogersii were also a feature.

These are the days when the fakirs are hard up for stock. The mum season will soon put them in cloverland, however.

The floral tokens at the funeral of Massachusetts' venerable and beloved senator, George F. Hoar, at Worcester, on October 3 were more numerous and costly than at any other funeral in this state for years and attested the high esteem in which Mr. Hoar was held by all parties.

J. Leach & Son have a neat and compact plant at North Easton. Some 8,000 carnations are grown. These include two seedlings which are grown in quantity and produce very freely. One is light and the other dark pink. Other sorts grown are Maceo, Queen, Lawson, Fair Maid, Eldorado and Edith Foster. A bench is also given to Mrs. Fisher, which is still found much the best outdoor summer bloomer. A good many Princess of Wales violets are grown. These are just being housed and are very fine. Chrysanthemums are mostly early varieties, their places being taken by violets later. Messrs. Leach have a stall in the new wholesale market.

Peter Fisher has a grand new white seedling carnation which will outclass Governor Wolcott in every respect. It has size, fragrance, a strong stem and calyx, is very double and beautifully fringed. This is the best of its color yet raised by Mr. Fisher and all who have seen it pronounce it a winner.

Local nurseries are very busy shipping perennial plants and report a very good trade in deciduous trees and shrubs for fall planting.

J. F. Butterworth, of South Framingham, is cutting some fine Cattleya labiata, Oncidium varicosum Rogersii and other seasonable orchids. He will have a fine cut of Cattleya Trianæ and Cypripedium insigne a little later.

The garden committee of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society were invited to visit the dahlia gardens of E. W. Ela, but the visit had to be cancelled last week, as all Mr. Ela's plants were frozen. A visit will be made at the end of October to the estate of Commodore M. F. Plant, Groton, Conn., in charge of T. W. Head, to inspect houses of carnations, roses and chrysanthemums.

W. N. Craig.

ALVIN, TEXAS.

The florist business at this end of the world is in the hands of the growers and cape jasmine and violets are about all that they are holding up at present. But we believe that the prospect is bright for further development, and we see no reason why roses and chrysanthemums cannot be grown quite as profitably as those already tried. In fact we believe it so strongly that we expect to give them a fair trial during the coming year.

The summer has been unusually rainy and jasmines that have received the proper care in the way of cultivation have put on a splendid growth and give the optimistic grower beautiful visions of a fine crop next May.

The acreage in violets shows a marked increase over last year and the plants generally look healthy and vigorous. They are grown here in open fields and the season begins with Thanksgiving and lasts until March, with only moderate danger from frosts. Last year the season was uninterrupted by cold the whole winter through. The Russian violet is the only variety that has been grown for market here, and to tell the truth, the violet business at this point is still in its infancy. What its future may be, who can tell?

THE BANNER BLUE LIMITED.

The first trains ever built up to a Pullman standard for daylight service in this country have been placed in operation on the Wabash line between St. Louis and Chicago, leaving St. Louis at 11:00 a. m. and Chicago at 11:03 a. m. daily, making the run in seven hours, even time. They are known as the "Banner Blue Limited," and are the most costly day trains ever constructed. Each train will consist of four cars, a combination baggage car and smoker, a combination coach and chair car, a combination diner and buffet, and a combination parlor and observation car.

In the advertisement of the W. T. Buckley Co., last week, Asparagus plumosus nanus, 2¼-inch, was quoted at $20 per 100; $190 per 1000. They will gladly fill orders at just one-tenth those prices.

New London, Conn.—The first annual flower show of the New London-Groton Horticultural Society will be held here November 21. Exhibits may be sent to Louis H. Geiger, of Pratt & Geiger, who is secretary of the show committee.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The crisp, cool, seasonable weather with which the week opens betokens a revival in business, which is all the more welcome because so long delayed. Good stock of all kinds is in demand. Chrysanthemums are now in the windows of most of the stores making any pretense to interesting display and are growing in size and numbers every day. In another week they will reign again as queen. Orchids hold their values easily, the supply still being limited and the demand widening. There is every evidence of their being established as the fashionable flower of the society season. Dahlias and asters cannot stand the breath of winter and their glory has departed. Carnations maintain their average prices and the novelties are again on deck. Brides, Maids and Beauties of the medium and lower grades can still be had at bargain rates, the supply being enormous. Violets are improving and the shipments from now on will increase rapidly. Already the street merchants seem to have an abundance of them on every corner.

Various Notes.

The Stumpp & Walter Co. was relieved of a barrel of brass syringes last week, the thief securing them from the wharf. A reward of more value than the goods is offered for the capture of the rascal.

Several of the wholesalers have been adding to their floor space in evident anticipation of a strenuous season. In all the stores the annual refreshment has been completed. Mr. Langjahr has moved his office to the rear of his large floor and maintains his record for neatness and convenience. James McManus has built an office balcony that adds very materially to his room, made necessary by his growing trade, and Jos. Fenrich and Julius Lang have similar additions to their floor space that will be especially appreciated as the season advances.

J. F. Wilcox, of Council Bluffs, has had a busy week visiting the great rose and carnation centers in and around the city and the bon-ton flower stores. He left on Tuesday for home, via Philadelphia and Washington. Those who enjoyed the Omaha convention do not forget the happy experience afforded them by Mr. Wilcox in '98 and his welcome here was a cordial one.

The auctions are now in full blast, the audiences increasing in numbers and prices excellent. Elliott is disposing of Cypripedium insigne in this way very satisfactorily.

Harry Bunyard, with the Clucas & Boddington Co., reports a busy season, with an increased force of helpers and night work necessary to keep pace with the demand. Among late reports was one shipment of over 250 cases of azaleas.

Reed & Keller have some more inventions and novelties, among them a large red folding bell that will surely be popular. It's an off week when Mr. Reed does not evolve some supply novelty from his fertile brain. Their bronze wreath and ribbon on easel is another specialty that will appeal to many. Over 50,000 of their small folding bells have already been ordered.

John A. Scollay, of Brooklyn, reports among late achievements the installing of three of the largest Invincible boilers at Alex. J. Guttman's, Summit, N. J., where they will heat nine houses, a 200-foot rose house at Edward Eggert's and a 150-foot house at Weber's, Lynbrook, built and heated by the invincible Scollay.

Brooklyn now has three wholesale florists' houses and the "green goods" venture of Crawbuck & Wiles, at 370 Pearl street, so that the sister city has no fear of a famine in cut flowers and supplies of every kind this winter.

The ribbon houses seem to be particularly elated this fall. Lion & Wertheimer report a big demand for violet scarfs and the corduroy violet ribbon, while Schloss Bros. show their bow knot effects for violet corsage and other original creations with many new shades and patterns and both these firms assert the value of their extensive exhibits at the St. Louis convention.

J. K. Allen has been receiving some fine Enchantress lately and excellent Omega and yellow sport chrysanthemums. He has recovered his land legs and has resumed his early morning devotions, much the better for his journey over the sea. Miss Riley, the faithful keeper of the books, is again in harness after her well earned holiday.

On October 19 A. C. Scott, with Alex. McConnell, will be married to Miss Jennie C. Reynolds, of New Rochelle. Hearty congratulations are extended Mr. Scott by his many friends. Mr. McConnell is the uncle of the bridegroom and it is needless to say that the decorations will be elaborate.

Siebrecht & Son have added several large rose and palm houses to their immense plant at New Rochelle, have made extensive additions to their nursery grounds and with additions and improvements now under way will have one of the greatest horticultural establishments in the country. The space allotted to orchids has been greatly enlarged during the past year and several houses devoted to the Killarney rose attest the firm's faith in its beauty and popularity.

Henry Siebrecht, Jr., has lately purchased a fine property adjoining the conservatories. Mrs. H. Siebrecht, Sr., has fully recovered from her serious illness and the father of Mr. Siebrecht, a hale old gentleman of 87, is now residing with his son, making a quartette of Henry Siebrechts, each one of whom bids fair to round out a century.

J. Austin Shaw.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

The West Michigan Fair was a great success. The floral exhibit was meager, the Grand Rapids Floral Co. and Crabb & Hunter being the only exhibitors. The premiums were passed round between the two. The amateurs made a very creditable showing.

The Grand Rapids Floral Co. had the decorations for the Herplesheimer dry goods store opening. Seven floors were decorated with asters and other outdoor flowers. Beauties and other roses were used in large quantities. It took seven loads of plants.

J. A. Creelman has torn down his greenhouses and assumed the management of Chas. Chadwick's flower store in the Loraine.

FANCY MUMS!

Yellow and White, strictly large and fancy, $3.00 to $4.00 per doz., also other smaller grades, $10.00 to $12.50 per 100.

Fancy Maids and Brides, $5.00 to $6.00 per 100.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., C. N. Page, Des Moines, Ia; First Vice-Pres., L. L. May, St. Paul; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 23rd annual meeting will be held on the St. Lawrence, June, 1905.

THE report from Germany is that cabbage will be a good crop, one of the best of the year.

LAWRENCE, KAN.—Barteldes & Co. report a loss of 4,000 to 5,000 bushels of onion sets by fire September 17.

THE directors of the Wholesale Seedsmen's League will have an important meeting at New York tomorrow, October 7.

W. W. BARNARD, Chicago, is on a visit to his stock farm at Le Roy, Ind., expecting the arrival of some fancy Hereford cattle and Percheron horses from the east.

MILLING and hand picking show the average lots of Alaska and extra early peas in better shape this year than last. The shrink on wrinkled varieties that have been handled so far is also lighter than usual.

A. LECOQ & Co., Darmstadt, Germany, say that Festuca elatior is of good quality and a large crop this season and advise that it be given special attention because of the reduction after three years of high prices.

REPORTS in general for the week show little change from a week ago. The weather has been seasonable and the standing crops have had nothing to retard any growth that would naturally be added to them during the time.

ARROYO GRANDE, CAL.—Routzahn Seed Co. reports that the recent heavy rains did little damage to the beans in that vicinity. Some damage was done in the Lompoc district, however, especially to Kentucky Wonder and other pole beans.

FAVORABLE reports from the east and the hopeful tone of the advices from Nebraska puts the cucumber seed situation in a better way. The shortage of this crop at the intermediate points may not be felt so much when the seed from all sections is gotten together.

NOTHING definite has been reported on the bean crop as yet. Threshing is under way in Michigan and some crops are ready to be delivered by the farmers. Harvesting is about finished and deliveries from the farmer to the warehouses, where milling and hand picking is done, will be in full swing by the end of the month.

CATALOGUES IN BULK.

The consensus of opinion seems to be that the act of Congress which provides for the mailing of third class matter with currency payment instead of stamps affixed has been rendered inoperative by the amount of detail provided for in the order of the third assistant postmaster general putting the law into effect. Each of the requirements, save the one requiring that a permit be obtained from Washington, seems reasonable but in the aggregate the requirements are so great that the work involved fully counterbalances the single advantage gained. The requirements are all intended to lighten the work in the postoffice. Inquiry at the Chicago postoffice elicits the information that many large mail order houses have made inquiry as to the details of the plan but that only one application for a permit was the outcome.

GOVERNMENT CROP REPORT.

The temperature during the week ending October 3, has been generally favorable for maturing and harvesting late crops, although excessively warm in portions of Kansas and the southern states. Heavy to killing frosts, causing some damage, were reported from Wisconsin. Drought continues in the upper Ohio valley and moisture is needed in Oklahoma and South Dakota.

Corn has experienced another week of favorable conditions, but frost was injurious in Wisconsin, much was blown down and damaged in Illinois, and dry weather is needed in Iowa to prepare the crop for cribbing. Corn is practically safe in Nebraska; less than ten per cent is in danger from frost in central Indiana, Iowa, and South Dakota, 20 per cent in northern and central Illinois.

Vegetable Forcing.

PARSLEY.

Where this very useful vegetable is made a specialty the plants will no doubt be well established in the benches, so that a supply can be had as soon as the outdoor crop is cut off by frost. Those who only grow parsley as a catch crop, or for filling in odd corners, may be depending on lifting plants from outdoors to fill up with and I would advise any such to get the plants in before hard freezing. Though they will stand quite a little frost, especially if protection is provided, still it is a check to the growth and satisfactory results are by no means certain after a severe check.

Parsley likes a fairly rich soil when grown under natural conditions, but under artificial conditions, such as winter forcing, a little caution should be exercised in this respect. Especially should the use of too fresh manure be guarded against, as it tends to make the soil heavy and retentive and the plants will not take so freely to it as they will to a lighfer soil. The soil should be such as to encourage the making of roots rather than the hastening of growth. When the plants have got a good hold and the bench is well filled with roots, liquid manure can be applied, or a top-dressing of well-enriched soil may be given when it is seen that the plants require it.

Though parsley is one of the easiest grown crops I know of, and with anything like fair treatment can be depended on to give fair returns, still a little special care and frequent stirring of the soil will amply repay the extra labor by materially increasing the yield. Watering should be carefully attended to and to have the plants clean and healthy it is very important that all decaying and yellow leaves should be kept picked off. Yellow leaves are only breeding places for insects and their presence imparts an untidy look.

The only insect pest that troubles parsley as a rule is greenfly. We have seen it attacked by red spider, but only when grown under unfavorable conditions or when the house is kept too dry and warm. The fly can be kept in check by tobacco, either by having the stems laid through the house or by occasional smokings. But smoke is apt to flavor the product somewhat for a day or two after it has been applied, so that care should be taken when smoking is to be done to have enough parsley pulled and set away in water in a cool cellar to last for a day or two until the smell of the smoke has worn off.

In old houses, or where the floor of the house forms the bed, snails are sometimes troublesome. These can be kept down by having slices of turnips or potatoes laid around to act as traps. The under side of the traps should be hollowed out so that when they get under they will stay, and by looking over the traps every morning and destroying those caught they may soon be thinned out.

DENVER.

After a siege of dullness seldom experienced in Colorado we are now passing into a period of activity and the store man is carrying a more pleasant countenance and is more easily approached on topics relating to his business.

Asters, gladioli and dahlias, owing to frequent rains, have been exceptionally fine this year. The latter are still in their prime and many of them are used extensively. Mrs. Winters, a good semi-cactus white is one of the best and in floral work does not, like most dahlias, look stiff and formal. The fall aster, the Michaelmas daisy, and Clematis paniculata are now asserting their rights to recognition. Both are pretty and graceful and have proven their value in recent decorations executed here. In competitive table decorations at the state fair this fall we saw this character of daisy used in conjunction with pink roses and adiantum and the effect was very showy and agreeable. At the same place there was a mantel decoration in which the clematis took a prominent part, in connection with Beauties and palms. Perhaps there is not anything at this time of the year that is as economical and effective as the clematis. Its fine cut glossy foliage with a profusion of dainty white flowers makes it well adapted for party or wedding decorations. For a bridal canopy it is superb.

Chrysanthemums are now showing themselves and are pushing many of the outdoor flowers to the rear. Many dread their coming but all agree that they fill up a gap at this time that no other flower can do. The market here looks as if it might be overstocked this fall, for while the majority of the crop will be up to its usual good quality, indications point to a lot of inferior stock, which has an influence on prices where the market for good flowers is limited. The varieties now on the market are Pacific, Iolanthe and Bergmann, pink; Monrovia and Modesto, yellow; Lady Fitzwygram and Polly Rose, white.

Denver and Colorado Springs florists were well represented at the state fair held at Pueblo last week. They were very successful in their various entries. Prizes to the amount of $50 were awarded for table and mantel decorations and proportionate amounts in baskets, bouquets and other features. The successful competitors were: For mantel, first, Daniels & Fisher, of Denver; second, Colorado Springs Floral Co.; tables, first, Colorado Springs Floral Co., with a neatly arranged table of dendrobiums and adiantum; second, Daniels & Fisher, of Denver, using Chatenay roses, Shasta daisies and adiantum; third, Geo. Fleischer, of Pueblo, with centre-piece of Maids. Daniels & Fisher took first in basket and Geo. Fleischer second. Wm. Clark, of Colorado Springs, took first for bridal bouquet, with lilies of the valley, and second went to Fleischer for bouquet of Brides. Wm. R. Mauff, of Denver, took first in Beauties, Queen of Edgely and second on Liberty and Bride. Daniels & Fisher were first on Bride, Liberty and Maid and Grimes & Son, of Denver, took five firsts in five entries in carnations, principal among them being Enchantress, Lawson and Harlowarden.

Wm. Clark, of Colorado Springs, took most of the prizes in plants. The competition in the plant line was very weak. Several hundred dollars are appropriated annually from the funds of the state board of horticulture to encourage and sustain an interest in floriculture at the state fair, but although the exhibitors were more in number than last year, the floral hall was not as well filled as heretofore, principally because some of the larger firms of Denver failed to put in an appearance. CINCINNATI.

The Market.

While trade was nothing extra last week, still when one takes into consideration the hot weather, it was not so bad. A. Sunderbruch Sons reported a very good business all week, but some of the stores were not so fortunate. At present there is a first-class demand and all of the wholesale houses are sold out early in the day. The supply of stock, with the exception of the very best quality, is equal to the demand and there are but few orders that cannot be filled. Carnations are arriving in much larger quantities and some very good ones are to be had. Still there are not enough. The supply of Beauties is rather small, with the quality none too good. Brides, Maids, Gates, Ivory, Cusin, Kaiserin, Chatenay, MacArthur, Liberty and Meteors are all to be had in quantity, medium and short-stemmed being especially abundant.

Asters are few, but dahlias and gladioli are still to be had. Cosmos, too, is in and sells very well. Longiflorum lilies and valley sell well. The storemen seem to be afraid to tackle violets; a good cold snap is needed to make them bring a paying price. Mums are coming in larger numbers and sell well. Most of them are Bergmann, but some Glory of Pacific and Estelle are to be had and are good.

Various Notes.

Saturday night is the regular meeting of the Florists' Society and President Ben George requests all members to be present.

R. A. Murphy, of Delhi, has just completed a violet house. His stock is in very good shape, especially when you consider that he has been short of water nearly all summer and has been obliged on many occasions to haul it from the Ohio river, about a mile from his place.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

The monthly meeting of the Tarrytown Horticultural Society was held September 27, President Ballantyne presiding. I. G. Raw and E. Lumbey, of Irvington, and Hamilton Scott, of Yonkers, were elected active members. I. H. King, Irvington, was nominated for membership.

David MacFarlane was awarded Secretary Neubrand's prize for display of dahlias and Mr. Featherstone, gardener for Samuel Untermeyer, Yonkers, N. Y., was awarded Wm. Scott's prize for display of flowers and fruits cut from hardy shrubs. On account of the November show coming so soon after the October meeting, it was decided not to offer any prizes for exhibits at the next meeting.

David MacFarlane favored the members with a very instructive lecture on dahlias, which was very freely discussed by Jas. Scott, L. Martin, Jos. Mooney, J. Bradley and others.

L. Martin, gardener for C. H. Matheison, Irvington, N. Y., read a very interesting essay on late flowering shrubs.

Ribbons are essential to flower decorations for October weddings. And, the ribbons ought to be distinctive. The RIGHT RIBBONS will give them this touch.

Richness of tone (as if touched by nature) and high qualities are blended combinations in Right Ribbons, woven especially for Florists' use.

They cost no more than inferior ribbons, for they come direct to you from our mill. "All between profits cut out."

DETROIT.

Trade was up to the usual summer level but was rather later than usual starting up this fall, for there was little doing up to the end of September. Now, however, things are traveling at a fair pace. Stock is generally in good shape and abundant, except Beauties for which we have to go to outside markets for the larger part of our supply. We have as good tea roses, carnations, mums and violets as are to be had anywhere. This has been a particularly good season for carnations and all the growers have their plants in fine shape.

The Michigan Cut Flower Exchange is rapidly getting its new store into shape and Mr. Dilger will soon have the best equipped wholesale cut flower store to be found anywhere in the country. It is in a deep, cool, airy basement built expressly for this use, with storage room under the sidewalk for ferns, wild smilax, etc. The store is several times as large as the old place.

The building so long occupied by John Breitmeyer's Sons is to be torn down and replaced by a handsome business block. During the rebuilding operations the store will be located in the new building, on the street floor, just over the Michigan Cut Flower Exchange, only a few doors from the present location. When the new building is finished the Breitmeyers will have one of the handsomest stores in the country, up-to-date in every respect but without conservatory facilities.

There is also talk of building a business block on the site of B. Schroeter's store in which they, too, would lose their conservatory. If the owner consummates his plan for improving the property Mr. Schroeter may seek a location on Woodward avenue. He has a big store opening decoration on this week.

The property in the rear of J. F. Sullivan's store is torn up by the building operations of the new heating company, causing him considerable inconvenience.

George A. Rackham and his bride are receiving many congratulations. One of the Beard brothers was recently married and there is rumor of a third member of the craft soon to embark on matrimonial seas.

Hugo Schroeter returned Monday from a few days' trip to Chicago.

HANDLING BULBS.

As a rule the people who buy assortments of hardy flowering bulbs from our florists and nurserymen do not succeed in keeping them over in good flowering condition longer than the first season. As this is the time of the year in which to plant bulbs for spring flowers, a few words of advice to retailers might not be amiss. Every florist has had plenty of experience with customers who come around each season and complain that the daffodils and hyacinths they bought have entirely disappeared from the ground and they will have to purchase the same lot over again if they want any flowers. Very often they dig up the remains of the bulbs, now reduced to about one-quarter of their natural size, and want to know what is the reason that they cannot keep their bulbous plants so they will have a succession of flowers yearly.

These people almost invariably plant their narcissi, tulips, daffodils or hyacinths in the vicinity of other garden plants. As we do not have summer rains in California and it is necessary to artificially water flowering plants and shrubs continuously through the dry season, the bulbs get too much water. They, more than almost any other garden flower, must have a good resting spell if well ripened, plump bulbs are to be had for replanting for another year. Even under these unnatural conditions hyacinths and tulips make an effort to flower the second year but after that they only show a few green leaves that generally disappear entirely after the third season.

If the public would learn to plant bulbs of almost every variety in beds by themselves and give them no water at all, but instead, give the soil a good spading after they are through blooming, there would be no trouble in preserving each variety.

I have grown as fine daffodil, tulip, hyacinth and narcissus bulbs as any I have seen imported without giving them a drop of water in the summer or fall. I transplant hyacinths and tulips every three years and daffodils and narcissi every four years. It is very beneficial to dig between the rows once or twice a season, as this does not allow the ground to dry out as quickly as it would otherwise.

With gladioli, callas, irises and snowdrops it makes very little difference where they are planted, as they want some moisture during their flowering season, which is much later than that of the others I have mentioned. With ranunculus, anemones, jonquils and crocus, water must also be used very sparingly as the bulbs will disappear completely.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

During the past week the greater portion of the Pacific coast has had an unprecedented deluge for the month of September. About five inches of rain fell in three days. Many thousands of dollars damage has been done to the fruit and seed growers and the farmers as well. From reports I hear from the chrysanthemum growers they suffered very little loss as the flowers are not yet opened enough to spoil under a heavy rain. The asters are entirely gone and sweet peas with them. Carnations are not plentiful and roses are between seasons. We are waiting patiently for outdoor mums to become cheap for then the troubles of the florist to get stock enough are over for a few months. Although business has been only fair for the past two weeks it has been quite a task to keep our windows well filled since the aster season is over. We have plenty of indoor mums, however, quite up to the standard in size and color. Valley is plentiful and sells wholesale at 60 cents per dozen. Lilium album and rubrum are about over.

Various Notes.

I called on several of the larger growers in the neighborhood of Fruitvale during the past week and found that the majority have finished changing the stock in their greenhouses. There are but few rose growers in that section but some of the finest carnations marketed here are from there. The growers are planting largely to Estelle and Lawson. The stock generally looks very well. The three large houses of A. Galloway are especially worthy of mention. Mr. Galloway grows nothing but carnations.

E. Gill, the Oakland florist, is on a three weeks' trip to Oregon and Washington.

The Cox Seed Co. has a very large and varied assortment of new varieties of dahlias in bloom on their grounds at Glen Echo.

Miss Charlotte Williams, the decorator, has had a busy month. She reports several large decorations for October.

D. Greuttner, the Vallejo florist and nurseryman, was in town this week.

John Young, of the Dwight Way nurseries, Berkeley, is cutting large quantities of Brides and Maids. He has twenty houses planted to roses and his stock is in excellent condition.

NEWPORT, R. I.

Some very interesting and meritorious exhibits were noted at the recent show of the Newport Horticultural Society, September 20-22. James Garthly, gardener to H. H. Rogers, secured a silver medal for Begonia grandiflora erecta cristata, which he exhibited at Boston earlier in the summer. This promises to be a useful plant; the flowers were of a fine pink color and fimbriated. The group of Nephrolepis Scottii, from John Scott, was much admired. It received a silver medal, against a certificate of merit awarded at the June show. Dreer's exhibit of nymphæas was extra fine. The handsome new pale blue Pennsylvania, with flowers a foot across, received a silver medal. This is one of the finest nymphæas we have ever seen. It is not yet in commerce, but is the very finest of the Zanzibariensis type.

Andrew Pow, gardener to Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, staged a charming group of the brilliant scarlet Nerine Fothergilli major, which was awarded a bronze medal. The plants showed excellent culture. Special commendation is due to the first prize group of foliage plants from Andrew S. Meikle, gardener to Mrs. W. S. Wells; his plants were finely grown. W. G. Postinop, gardener to Mrs. Winthrop Chandler, secured the silver medal offered for the best new seedling dahlia. It was named in honor of his employer.

Gardenias are especial favorites at Newport and are always well shown. Those from Mrs. C. Vanderbilt, Perry Belmont and Mrs. Wm. Astor were extra good. N. F. Burt's winning collection of cactus dahlias was very fine and included a beautiful selection.

The classes provided for table decorations on the second day were well competed for. They were judged by Mrs. Lorillard Spencer, Miss Anna F. Hunter and Mrs. Hamilton Fish Webster. Mrs. J. R. Drexel's special prizes for best table decoration of dahlias went to Joseph Gibson, gardener to James Stillman, who used Vloker, a bright yellow variety, and Oscar Schultz, who used Progenitor, dark red. For the best decoration of out-door flowers and foliage, exclusive of roses and dahlias, Gibson Bros. won by using Salvia splendens to good effect. Oscar Schultz, who was second, used Lilium speciosum roseum with Clematis paniculata. The exhibit of fruit was poor but vegetables were very good. The judges were William Anderson, South Lancaster, Mass., John Scott and Warren Spaulding.

VISITOR.

TORONTO.

The Market.

Trade during the last few weeks has been very good, and the great scarcity of flowers has made it appear as though we were extra busy. Considerable funeral work has helped to increase the demand for white flowers, while we note numerous large weddings, and other decorations. Dahlies have been plentiful, but outside of that cut flowers have been decidedly short.

Various Notes.

Dunlop's King street store has received its finishing touch from the hands of the decorators and it is certainly very artistic.

A new store has been opened by F. Bakewell, son-in-law of F. C. Miller, of Bracondale, and has been fitted up with all the latest ideas in flower store equipment and, although it is located on College street, some distance from the downtown section, it should control a considerable portion of the best trade, as Mr. Bakewell informs us that he intends to handle only first-class stock.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

The past week has given us a taste of some of the good things expected this season. Trade has had a healthy growth for two weeks, and this, with some very large funeral orders, has used up all the available stock, so that we can safely report a very satisfactory week.

The death of H. W. Williams, the proprietor of the leading variety theatre, made a boom in funeral work Saturday and Sunday. There were about thirty large designs, ranging from $10 to $75 each, the largest display of handsome designs seen here in years. While all the florists had a portion of this work, E. C. Ludwig certainly had the lion's share.

An Opening.

E. C. Ludwig opened his new store on East Diamond street, Allegheny, last Thursday. The store is certainly a credit to the city; it is finished all in white, and the furniture of green oak. The counters are all heavy marble tops and movable tables. In the rear he has a conservatory the width of the store, about twenty feet, heated with one of Lord & Burnham's hot water boilers. The total depth of store and conservatory is about 100 feet. As souvenirs he had flower pots made with his name stamped on them and filled with small seedling palms or ferns; he gave away several thousand of these, and as the crowd continued to come in he fell back on flowers and was still handing them out to crowds of visitors at 10 p. m. The craft congratulate Ernest on this, another evidence of his energy.

Various Notes.

J. K. Hutchinson, who has been doing landscape gardening in Sewickley, will open a cut flower store next Thursday and, as he is well known in that section, which is the suburban home of the most fashionable set about Pittsburg, we predict for him a successful future.

The Pittsburg Cut Flower Co. were pushing chrysanthemums, Beauties, and good violets last week. The violets were very fine for this season.

A. W. Smith has been showing some fine pink mums, Glory of Pacific, the past week. He reports fall business as looking even better than last year.

There is much complaint about the way our custom house assesses duty on bulbs, charging about the same for the cheaper bulbs as for the best grades. It seems almost impossible for some of the smaller importers to get the necessary information from them, how to get their goods, which causes a great deal of loss of time and some profanity.

L. I. Neff's is the only store in Pittsburg making a good display of bulbs; in fact, the only store in this city handling a complete line of bulbs and seeds in a retail way, as well as plants and cut flowers. W. C. Beckert, Allegheny, makes a specialty of flower and vegetable seeds and bulbs, wholesale and retail.

Jos. Thomas, of Greensburg, Pa., who has been in the business as a plantsman for some years, is about to open a store and take up the cut flower end of the business. He is a hustler and never fails in anything he undertakes.

For the past few years the trade has been making a feature of bells for Christmas made of sawdust, immortelles and paper; it remained for Mr. Elverson, the pot man, to ring in a clay one, and it is now on sale, very pretty, painted a bright red with a gold edge.

Some of the visitors last week were Geo. Schomer, Connellsville, Pa.; Barton Bros., Uniontown, Pa.; W. M. Cromack, Irwin, Pa.; W. A. Herbert, Wellsville, Ohio.

BOULDER, COLO.

Every effort is being put forth for a big business in this city the coming season. Mrs. Jane M. Johnson has made several additions to her already very complete greenhouses, added a new violet house and raised the roof to others and put in new benches. All her houses are well filled and the stock is looking fine. She has one of the best florists in Colorado in charge of her houses and should do a thriving business.

Ed Hubbard, the pioneer florist of this place, has quit raising flowers and gone into the vegetable business. He has two houses 20x100 for that purpose. Mr. Knudson, who has been raising vegetables for some years, has quit that and has his houses filled with roses and carnations. Each claims to have been making money, but says there is more money in the other line, so "you pay your money and take your choice."

The McKinzie houses, on Twelfth street, are in charge of F. A. Haenselman, a florist from Denver, and this is his first season.

C. P. Waldron has two houses on North Twelfth street and things are looking well with him. He has been here for years and has a well established trade.

The Cannon Company is under the management of John Porter, George B. Cannon having retired from the business. The greenhouses are located at Lafayette, twelve miles from Boulder, with a retail store at Boulder.

The people of Boulder are very liberal in buying flowers, plants, etc., and we hope there may be enough business for everyone. Rex.

Grand Rapids, Mich.—Chas. Chadwick has opened a flower store in the Loraine.

Whitehall, Mich.—Thomas Denham has sold the Whitehall Floral Co. to W. E. Pew, who will continue the business.

The Gardeners' Chronicle.

When a flower bud is forming at the apex of each shoot on a chrysanthemum growth ceases for a brief period. In a few days each shoot will be bristling with new growths, especially immediately under the newly formed bud. When it can be determined that the bud is perfect in form, all these shoots should be removed. This is what is meant by the term "taking" the bud; really taking the bud in charge is what is meant.

Clerodendron fallax has on several occasions been strongly recommended for its usefulness for conservatory decoration during the summer months. The best way is to grow it in considerable numbers and to take the plants to the conservatory when coming into bloom.

Begonias contribute materially to the many attractions of the greenhouse in the Royal Gardens, Kew, and afford object lessons of much value to visitors. Especially noteworthy in the center of the house are the splendidly flowered examples of Begonia cocinea, a robust erect-growing species, bearing in profusion large clusters of bright coral-red flowers; and President Carnot, a magnificent variety, similar in character to the foregoing, but more robust in growth, and producing larger and more richly colored flowers. The specimens of the first-named are about four feet in height, while the examples of the latter range from four to six feet, and, with their numerous clusters of bright red flowers are very effective.

Spiraea Arguta.—The shrubby forms of spiræa are now innumerable, but however rigid a selection is carried out, this must on no account be omitted. It forms a dense bush about four feet to five feet high, and toward the end of April the slender, gracefully disposed branches are crowded with clusters of pure white blossoms. A great recommendation is its comparative indifference to frosts and cutting winds, which often play havoc with many early flowering shrubs. This spiræa is of hybrid origin, having been raised, on the Continent, between S. Thunbergi and S. multiflora. It is sometimes employed for flowering under glass, a purpose for which it is well suited.

Impatiens Oliveri is a handsome species that has the promise of proving of considerable value for decorative purposes. This species was discovered by the late Joseph Thomson, at Lykipia, Tropical East Africa, at elevations ranging from 6,000 to 8,000 feet, with flowers scarcely more than one and a half inches across. It is a point of some interest that while the flowers of the wild plants are white, the flowers of the plants under cultivation are of a rose-lilac hue.

Within the last fifty years great changes have taken place in plant culture, many subjects at one time popular having almost disappeared from cultivation, while, on the other hand, some (tuberous begonias, for instance), then completely unknown, are now met with in nearly every garden. Through all these vicissitudes the zonal pelargonium (geranium) has held its own as a general favorite, not, however, always represented by double-flowered forms, for these did not make their appearance till 1865.

FROM OUR ENGLISH EXCHANGES.

The Gardeners' Magazine.

Amaryllises, when the bulbs are dried off and quite at rest, may be wintered in any structure where the temperature does not fall below 38 degrees. This may be considered a safe limit, although once in my experience a batch of bulbs which had commenced to throw up their young leaves were accidently subjected to a temperature which was one or two degrees below freezing point, without apparent injury to either leaves or bulbs.

The proper maintenance of hedges under any circumstances entails no small amount of labor, but by cutting at the right season, while the growth is soft, labor is considerably lessened as compared with that which is required to cut hardened growths. Moreover, winter or spring cut hedges frequently bulge out at the top and look unsightly all the year. The same thing may, of course, happen by cutting in August, but at that time the fault is more easy to remedy, and early autumn trimming produces a neat hedge during the greater part of the year—autumn, winter, spring, and part of summer. This cannot be said to be the case with pruning deferred to winter or spring.

Lonicera Hildebranti.—I lately visited Robert Veitch & Son's nursery at Exeter, and among many other interesting things saw this giant honeysuckle in fine bloom in a glasshouse. I cut a couple of bloom-trusses to take home with me, and found on measuring the perfect flowers that they were five inches in length, and nearly three inches across the open mouth. The blossoms are bright yellow in color and very fragrant.

Begonia Socotrana.—Prior to the introduction of the newer varieties of winter-flowering begonias, one was always endeavoring to induce this species to flower in the early part of the winter, but the necessity for this no longer exists, and it is now most useful when in bloom at its proper season, which is from about the middle to the end of winter. Let the clusters of bulbils be divided into smaller clusters of about six or eight, and pot these in loam, leaf-soil and sand, using small, well-drained pots. This begonia enjoys a high temperature and a moist atmosphere, and should be grown near to the glass, in order to prevent the flower-stems from becoming drawn. When the plants are well rooted they should be afforded a shift into 5-inch pots, which will be sufficiently large enough for all but very strong plants to flower in.

When the growths of peonies have withered, cut them off, and fork over the soil lightly, then apply a mulch of good rotten manure, and afford water afterwards if necessary. These remarks will apply to the Moutan as well as to herbaceous varieties. Remove all shoots from the stocks of Moutan peonies that appear below the grafts.

MORE DETAILS NEEDED.

I have a plant heating two houses, which worked perfectly until last season. There is a separate flow and return for each house. Last winter one house would get too hot and the other too cold; not always the same house. When we start to fire one flow will get hot and the other stay cold, the return getting hot first, sometimes one and sometimes the other. No one seems to know what is the matter. Can you help me? W. T. S.

Without a definite plan or description of the arrangement of the pipes and boiler in your system it is impossible to suggest a solution for the trouble. There are numerous causes which might lead to the difficulty you describe, but without a full detail of the plant we can only guess at the real cause. Send a sketch of your plant, and a description, and we will endeavor to solve the problem. L. C. C.

WAPPINGER'S FALLS, N. Y.

F. R. Pierson, of Tarrytown acted as judge of the fourth annual show of the Wappingers Dahlia Society Sept. 16 and 17. It was a very successful exhibition, although many of the out-of-town exhibitors who had been expected sent word that their stock had been destroyed in the big storm the night before. Among the professional exhibitors were H. N. Cottam, Adam Laub & Son, H. A. Dreer Co., Henry Osterhout, gardener for W. P. Clyde, and John Galvin, gardener for Irving Grinnell, who won the silver cup for best display. Most of the exhibits were the work of the amateurs of the vicinity.

HAMMOND'S SLUG SHOT
For Sow Bugs!

TESTIMONIAL:—We were simply being eaten up with sow bugs and could find nothing that would kill them off half as fast as they increased until about a year ago, when we tried Hammond's Slug Shot, and to-day our houses are almost clean of them and we have used less than 200 lbs. in eight greenhouses. That Slug Shot is good. Respectfully,

Are all flower growers liars?

SURELY this cannot be true; well, we have over 100 growers who have written us, a large majority without request, their opinions; we publish a few of these letters in the columns of this paper; see on pages 975, 978, 979, 980, 981, what they say about the FUMIGATING KIND TOBACCO POWDER. All began with a five-pound trial bag at our expense, which gave them an opportunity without cost to prove its GOODNESS and our assertion that it was the most effective, cleanest and quickest, as well as cheapest (10 cents per 100-foot house) article to fumigate with, and that all kinds of aphis can be killed in one night. Let us send you a five-pound trial bag by express, it will cost you nothing but the express charges on it, and be convinced that what your brother growers say of it is true. Our booklet tells of it; we mail it on request.

TOO MUCH HEAT.

I have a ten-section Carmody boiler heating two houses 25x75, separated by a partition, two feet of glass in one side of each, south end glass, except two and one half feet, shed across north end. I was told when building to put in eight runs of 2-inch pipe and so put eight under each bench, thinking that was the meaning of my instructions. Judging by the answers to queries in the Review, I begin to think I have too much pipe, even for Nova Scotia. I want 56 to 60 degrees in one house and 45 to 50 degrees in the other.

I have to shift my boiler, as it is not deep enough. The top is now about eighteen inches above the level of the coils and the circulation is poor. The main flow and return are 4-inch, branching into 3-inch. In fitting the boiler hubs the maker used 3½-inch couplings in place of 4-inch nipples. I wrote to him about it and he said it would make no appreciable difference so near the boiler. Is the boiler large enough? How deep should it be set? W. C.

I do not have the rating of a ten-section Carmody boiler but the manufacturers will undoubtedly gladly give the radiation the boiler is supposed to carry. In your case a boiler with a capacity for heating at least 1,200 feet of radiation should be provided. The house to be run at 56 to 60 degrees should have twelve runs of 2-inch pipe the length of the house and the house to run at 45 to 50 degrees should be provided with ten runs of 2-inch pipe. The distribution of the pipes will depend upon the construction of the benches, which is not stated, as well as the direction of the prevailing winds. If it is possible to lower the boiler so as to bring the top of the boiler eighteen inches to two feet below the radiation pipes, the circulation will be quicker and the heating more satisfactory than it will be with less fall. One 3-inch riser should be sufficient to carry the radiation in either of these houses.

South Bend, Ind., April 4, 1904.

"Superior to any Hot Water Boiler we have ever used. You certainly have placed the right name to your Boilers; no effort at all to keep the temperature at desired points when zero weather comes. Night after night the past severe winter weather gave your Boiler a good test. We are more than pleased with the Superior Boiler." Yours truly, Treanor & Rettic.

SUPPLYING SOIL ELEMENTS.

Stock which has been growing freely since planting time should now have the soil well filled with roots, the small feeders of which will now be so close to the surface that further cultivation will be sure to destroy or injure them, and ought therefore to be discontinued.

To provide sufficient food for coming crops and to supply the elements which have already been absorbed a light mulch should be applied as often as the plants require it. To obtain the full benefit of a mulch it is not necessary to put it on thick, as this excludes the sun's rays from the soil and prevents the beneficial action of the air on its surface, an inch thick being amply sufficient at this season. Besides, small and frequent applications are better and safer than to take any risks by giving an over-dose.

There is no better or safer material for this purpose than decomposed cow manure, and to render this fit for immediate use it should be passed through a screen of ¾-inch mesh and about one-third of its bulk of good fibrous loam added. This gives it weight and helps retain it in its place on the bench when water is applied. To this compost can be added a 6-inch pot of desiccated bone meal to each bushel. The whole should be thoroughly incorporated before being spread evenly over the surface.

For some weeks after applying the mulch a careful inspection of the benches each day will be necessary, as appearances are very deceptive. The manure in the mulch absorbs and retains the moisture, giving the bench the appearance of being moist enough, when a careful examination may disclose the fact that the soil underneath the mulch may be bone dry.

When the mulch has become partly exhausted a top dressing of unleached wood ashes will greatly benefit both foliage, stem and color of bloom. This being a very concentrated form of food, will require to be used with caution, as an over-dose will quickly sicken the plants and cause the young wood to wilt. For a first application one bushel will be sufficient to cover 100 square yards of bench. After the plants get accustomed to this kind of food they will thrive on double the quantity.

Most of our rose soils are deficient in calcareous matter as regards culture under glass and, where that element is also low in the water supply, means should be taken to supply this want from time to time. This can be supplied in the form of air-slaked lime, a generous sprinkling of which can be given at least once a month all the year around.

A serviceable fact to bear in mind is that bone meal and lime in combination release so much ammonia that no rose will succeed where it is used, the foliage being sure to suffer from even a slight application.

Beauties, being gross feeders, require more attention in respect to food than Brides and other teas, but the fact that they are heavy feeders does not warrant us in giving them an extra heavy mulch, as they are just as susceptible to overfeeding as are our most delicate varieties of teas. Also, if they are once sickened it takes them a much longer time to recover. RIBES.

PLANTS FROM FIELD.

We would like some information on roses. Can we take tea roses from the field into the greenhouse with any success and how should we treat them? They are about the size of 4-inch pot roses and have been in the field since last spring, set out from 2½-inch pots. Can we take up tea roses and make dormant plants of them, and how shall we treat them? A. T. B.

It is an easy matter to bring tea roses to a dormant condition and transplant into the house with success. This is being done quite frequently with Californian stock. I, however, think it would be a losing transaction to lift such small roses from the field and plant at this late season, as it is an established fact that roses are rarely a success financially unless we can get them into crop about the holiday season, and these plants can hardly be in condition to bear a crop till spring.

To get them to make a start in the house they should be lifted when the soil is dry and transplanted into good, rich soil. Give one good watering around the roots, keep the house cool and moist until root action commences, shade the house lightly for a week and syringe once a day during bright weather. As root action commences, which will be indicated by the eyes beginning to swell, gradually increase the supply of water and give air more freely. Remove the shading as soon as the eyes begin to break. Until the leaves develop and young shoots begin to appear the temperature should be kept at about 50 degrees at night, not to exceed 55 degrees during the day, if possible.

This method of culture has been tried by many experts during the last ten years, but that they do not follow it up is a sure indication that it is not a wholly satisfactory one. RIBES.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

The Dutch Bulbs.

You will find time now to get all the Dutch bulbs into flats, reserving enough for your bedding trade, and let me say just here that there is no hurry about planting hyacinths and tulips for next spring's outdoor display. The very best display of tulips we ever saw were put into the ground near the end of November when it was very wet. No need to wait quite so late or to have the ground unpleasant to work on, yet it is well known that late planting of these bulbs gives a better and more lasting show in the spring than those planted early. To be definite, say, the middle of November will be right.

Outdoor Bulb Displays.

Be sure and plant deep enough. Six inches is not too deep. The bulbs will work up toward the surface during early spring. And plant thick enough. If you have a customer who wants a twelve-foot circular bed of tulips and can only afford to buy 200 bulbs, persuade him to make the bed only six feet across, or, better still, prove to him that a twelve-foot bed needs about 450 tulips to be really handsome. About six inches apart is a good distance for tulips and the same for hyacinths. Where large quantities, say 5,000 or 6,000 in one bed, are used the inner rows can be planted thinner with just as good effect, because you look over them and if they were one foot apart they would still look a dense mass of bloom. Yet a small bed sparsely planted is a chilly looking object and some nice green grass is pleasanter to look upon.

While on this subject it is as well to say that a covering of four or five inches of stable litter should be spread over the beds after real winter has set in, not so much to keep out frost, for it's doubtful if the hardest freezing does them any harm, but toward spring the alternate freezing and thawing brings the bulbs to the surface and injures the buds which are already peeping through the ground. Remove the winter covering as soon as hard frosts are over or before much top growth is made.

Bulbs for Forcing.

To return to the forcing operation, there is nothing new to add to what already has been so often told. Briefly, use flats three inches deep and always a uniform size. A light soil, or the old carnation soil that you threw out last summer will do. Put the bulbs in thickly, almost touching, and you will save space, time and labor. Soak the soil in the flats and then lay some old boards down on the open ground and place the flats on them. We don't mean a whole floor of boards, but a strip at each end of the flats, so that they lift up clean when you want to bring them in to force.

After the first thorough watering has soaked in, cover with three inches of soil. Some use tanbark. And that's all that's needed unless the weather is dry. If so, you must give these beds a thorough watering once a week or the soil in the flats will be dry and little root growth will occur and they will be in poor condition to force. After the soil covering the flats has an inch or so of frost in it, cover the beds with six inches of stable litter.

Now we have never failed to have good tulips and daffodils with these methods, yet our winters vary so much in duration, severity and amount of snow that I have seen us have to actually chop the flats out with an ax. At other times the snow was so constant and heavy that frost never even entered the soil or tanbark covering the flats and by April 1 you would see the green leaves of Yellow Prince shoving up through soil and litter into daylight. That's not good. It does not often occur, but to keep the top growth dwarf until forcing time is desirable.

Bulb Stock in Pans.

Bulbs that we grow in pots or pans we prefer to put into frames or where, in addition to the covering of soil, we can protect them with sash or shutters, because if frost should reach the pots and pans there would be a good deal of breakage. Many growers of hyacinths put them in flats as you would tulips or Roman hyacinths for cutting. Then at forcing time they lift them carefully out of the flats without losing any of their roots and make them up into pans or single pots; they flower just about as well as those put into the pots or pans in October.

We constantly during winter make up 8 to 12-inch pans of single tulips taken from flats in full flower and there is no fraud or harm in doing so, for the customer has just as much pleasure from them. Yet there are some bulbs that we grow especially for Easter that we much prefer to put into the pans now, viz., Von Sion narcissus, Murillo and Tournesol tulips and first-class Dutch hyacinths.

Storing Canna Roots.

Our late heavy frost has killed the cannas almost to the ground, so at the first opportunity dig them up, shake off most of the earth, cut off the stems five or six inches above the roots and lay them under a bench where there is little or no drip. We often learn how to do things right by observing cases where "how not to do it" was the method. A bench where pot plants are used and where the drip through is copious is the worst possible place for these roots. A carnation or rose bench, where little drip should occur during winter, is a good place for them, but don't put them on the ground. Lay down some boards to keep moisture away from them or the eyes will start growing, which will be a loss. Do your best to keep the varieties apart, so that there is no risk of their getting mixed. The roots are not so distinguishable to the average florist as Enchantress and Lawson carnations and when a bed of Tarrytown produces a few plants of Kate Gray or David Harum they are out of place.

Caladium Esculentum.

The Caladium esculentum is so cheap that it does not pay to go to much trouble over them, still if you have a lot of medium size corms it will cost little to dig them, cut the stem off nine or ten inches above the root and lay them under a warm, dry bench. These you need not put on boards, as the slight moisture arising from the ground keeps them just right.

Dahlias.

We have been more encouraged with dahlias this summer than for many years past. In August and September they flowered finely and sold well. Cut the stems off a few inches above the ground, shake off the soil and store them anywhere that the temperature is about 40 degrees. Where potatoes will keep is a good place for the dahlia tubers.

Make up your mind to grow some dahlias this winter. What little I know will be told later. It is easy to do very satisfactorily and profitably. The roots now dug up and that have flowered this fall may be all right for starting at New Year's for an Easter crop, but I would rather depend on roots especially prepared for the purpose, that is, grown in pots during the summer and ripened off early, so that they would be more willing to start. A low bench where you have grown chrysanthemums and can keep a night temperature of 50 to 55 degrees is the place and the cactus and pompon varieties are the types to grow. There is no "crop" about them. They will flower from April to July. We considered our 100 plants of dahlias last spring a decided ten-strike.

Gladioli.

Wherever potatoes will keep, so will gladioli. The gentlemen who grow ninety acres, or one-third of it, must have cellars or cool houses especially adapted for their purpose. A dry basement where there is a furnace is too dry for these roots and corms. But laid out in shallow flats or boxes, beneath a bench in a cool house, will do very well.

Cyclamen.

This is the time to sow cyclamen if you want fine plants for Christmas, 1905. They can be sown from September 1 to New Year's. This month is all right. Keep in a temperature of 55 to 60 degrees and keep moderately moist. Cyclamen seed is rather slow to germinate, so have patience and keep the weeds picked out. Now here is a case where baking the soil that is to be used to cover the seed is most beneficial. It may be nearly three months before the little plants are ready to transplant. In that time you may have a botanic garden on the surface of the soil. A few minutes roasting of this small quantity of soil will kill seeds of all the coarser weeds, as well as the many species of minute plant life that quickly infest any vacant territory. William Scott.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

GIVE A MUM SHOW.

Why don't you wake things up a bit this fall? It isn't so very difficult and usually it's quite worth while in point of profit. Besides, have you no pride in having your place known, in seeing your business grow, not only for the money there may be in it but for the pure joy of doing things? By the way, did you ever notice that the fellow who does rational things for the mere joy of doing is usually the one who has all the money he needs to do things with? No, it isn't the money that does the things; it's doing the things that makes the money, usually.

There are not many florists so slovenly that they wouldn't do more business if their places were better known. Get the people in, treat them politely, don't urge them, mark the prices on a few things and they'll buy. If not this time, they'll come again. But don't urge; nobody will come back to a place where he can't get away unless he makes a purchase or leaves his self respect.

But to get the people? That's not so hard. Give a chrysanthemum show. If you grow your own stuff it's easy. Clean up the greenhouses; fix up the store. Engage a couple of men to fiddle. Get a punch bowl, fill it with pink lemonade and get a pretty girl to serve. Possibly it will be worth while to give each lady a rose, each gentleman a carnation; but what will you give the children? That's always a problem when you begin to give things away.

Now don't forget the advertising. The smaller the town the easier this is. The average country editor is the nicest fellow in the world. Take him a box of flowers; he'll be very glad to hear that at last the town is going to have a flower show to which he and his wife are specially invited. Don't forget to tell him about the fiddles and the punch bowl. In a bigger town you will have to pay for a small advertisement to get a bigger one free in the reading columns, and in a big city it's a case of cash with order if your standing isn't known. But it's worth it. If the city is too big to draw people from all parts of it, print some handbills and distribute them in your vicinity; or print a neat invitation and mail it, but stamps cost money.

If you are a retail florist and haven't any greenhouses you can have a show just the same. You can get all the stock you need in the wholesale markets. And you can run your show in the evening, which the greenhouse man can't, for likely he hasn't light enough in his houses.

If you give a good show and treat the people right, don't be discouraged if the attendance isn't quite what you expected. The people will all come back next year and bring their friends. And while you have your store nicely trimmed up with wild smilax, asparagus, plants and cut flowers, see that the progressive dry goods man looks in; perhaps he will want to fix up a bit for his fall opening, or perhaps not until Easter.

A WEDDING ARCH.

The accompanying illustration is reproduced from a photograph showing an original idea in decorating, conceived by an amateur for his daughter's wedding and executed by himself as a part of the floral decorations. The arch is built upon a low radiator in front of a window, the native ferns pretty effectually screening the iron from view. The floral arch itself is of well-flowered sprays of Crimson Rambler rose and with the lace window draperies, as the illustration shows, makes an unusual and attractive background for the marriage service. The idea is that of W. W. Ainsworth, Des Moines, Ia.

An Arch of Sprays of Crimson Rambler Rose.

A GOOD CENTER-PIECE.

A dahlia not often seen in the western cut flower markets is Twentieth Century. It could not help but sell. It would be a profitable investment for anyone to grow a batch for his wholesale market and it would pay every retail florist who has a high-class trade to either grow a few for his own use or to arrange to have someone grow some for him. The flowers are large, single, white, with pink center. This fall they have been in very good demand in the large cities of the east, where moderate quantities have been offered. For dinner table centerpieces nothing is finer. Put them in bowls or baskets with Adiantum cuneatum, Croweanum or Farleyense.

MAKING MOTTOES.

Almost all of the motto making that is done is of either flowers or foliage. The former, of course, is the more elaborate and expensive, and the letters should be made, with few exceptions, after the style of the ordinary shallow floral design. Flowers of good keeping quality, uniform size and one color should be selected, and stemmed on half picks, and the letter frame filled according to the practice for the construction of other plain, solid designs. Special care should be exercised to have the letters proportioned correctly, and when fastened on the wall, placed in exact lines. Have as marked a contrast between the background and letters as the laws of color allow. No background but a plain one is fit for lettering. If the wall is figured substitute a temporary background of plain paper or fabric. Letters made on sphagnum-filled frames are too heavy and thick to tack or nail to the wall, but must be suspended like a picture, with wire, from the moulding above. It is a nice task to suspend the letters on a line and it is well in any case to mark off the line, carpenter-like, before beginning to hang the letters. Make plain capital letters all the way through the motto. Letters of nine to twelve inches in height and wide in proportion can be seen plainly in any ordinary hall or church.

More commonly used and easily made are letters of stiff cardboard covered with green or autumn foliage. According to the season, use lycopodium, arbor-vitæ clippings, oak, English ivy or brilliant red, bronze or yellow autumn leaves. draw out the cardboard letters free hand and cut with sharp knife or scissors. If you are a woman, you will naturally us the latter weapon, but if you belong to the sterner sex, of course you will never condescend to cut with anything but a knife. A very satisfactory letter covering for summer decorations is well-matured green oak leaves. Lay them end for end on the letter and sew through and through with silkaline. There is just enough fantastic variation in the outline of the oak leaf to give an ornamental touch to the letter. In some places, however, a little trimming of the edge of the leaf will be necessary. Letters so constructed are light and one tack in each will secure them in place on the wall. If letters must be made smaller than the above dimensions, trim the leaves to the exact size of the letter after they are sewed on. Unless kept very cool, green oak leaves and autumn foliage will begin to curl about the third day after cutting. In this and all other decorative work keep doors and windows closed to exclude draughts of air, for breezes are worse than heat on cut flowers.

For Christmas or later winter decorations, holly, arbor-vitæ or lycopodium mottoes are the most durable. Make holly letters like the oak, by sewing. Arbor-vitæ may be either sewed or wrapped on the letters. Small clippings are the most easily handled. If lycopodium is to be used, choose the sprays and construct letters as described above with the oak and arbor-vitæ. Scarlet immortelles make good motto material for winter occasions.

If the sentiment of a motto can be expressed by a good symbolic design, make that in preference to lettering.

If it becomes necessary to manufacture your own background, as is mentioned above, and there is enough foliage at hand, make a brilliant background of sumach, oak or maple leaves, and the lettering in green over it, or make a holly background and lettering of red immortelles. If plenty of space is available, and expense permits, letters might be made of smilax wrapped on the face of the letter forms with silkaline. Still other materials suitable for this work are galax leaves, leucothœ, laurel or other foliage of tough or woody structure.

FLOWERS BY TELEGRAPH.

Put a neat sign in your window: "Funeral or gift flowers delivered by telegraph anywhere in the United States." When you have taken an order refer to the page of "Leading Retail Florists" in the Review and select a man to whom to telegraph the order. You will find it a very satisfactory source of new business.

STORING CUT FERNS.

Please tell us how to put up common ferns so they will keep during the winter. I am new in the business and shall appreciate the information. M. G.

Although the correspondent does not say so, it is supposed from the fact that his letter is dated in northern Michigan, that he proposes to go into the woods and gather hardy ferns for his own use. This is done by many in that locality. E. E. Pieser, of the Kennicott Bros. Co., Chicago, says that so far as he knows they each have some sort of rough cellar in which the ferns may be kept just below freezing. They are gathered and packed in boxes, perhaps with a little sphagnum moss between the layers of ferns, although this is not necessary. The boxes usually have holes bored in the sides to admit air. The point is that the box must become frozen through and kept just below freezing until the stock is wanted; then the case is removed to a place where it will thaw out very gradually. Alternate freezing and thawing spells ruin. As to keeping ferns in artificial cold storage, the wholesale florists, particularly in Chicago, have spent thousands of dollars in trying to find out how it should be done and have not yet discovered the way to insure success. Sometimes the ferns keep; sometimes they don't. It is a speculative proposition.

As to keeping ferns bought in moderate quantities from the wholesaler, as good a way as any is to put them in buckets of water, standing the ferns as many as will go in a bucket, with water two inches up the stems. Cover with damp cheesecloth and place in the room where carnations are ordinarily kept. See that the cloth is kept dampened and water in the bucket.

VARIETIES IN FLOWER.

The list of varieties ready for cutting is growing every day and now begins to include the big fellows. Lady Harriet, Alice Byron, Halliday, Mrs. Coombes, White Coombes, Mrs. T. W. Pockett and in a day or two more, Robinson.

Alice Byron as an early white is peerless and how this variety filtered into the trade and established itself as a top-notcher without any previous heralding is one of the mysteries that has never been satisfactorily explained. Byron has been planted largely this year by the commercial growers and is giving great satisfaction.

Mrs. Coombes is now quite largely grown as a pink and its white sport, which will be introduced next year, will undoubtedly be well received. As is often the case with a sport, it shows some rejuvenation and is a stronger grower than the parent, but otherwise is similar, in foliage and every other respect. This white sport appeared last year with President Arthur Herrington, of the C. S. A., at Madison, N. J. Whether it has appeared elsewhere through the country I have not heard, but it is quite possible.

Cutting and Shipping.

It is a very wrong practice, though quite common, to cut the flowers, pack them in boxes, and ship them to market without having them stand in water for some time. When one gets a rush order and has to ship at once, there is no help for it, but under ordinary conditions it is far better to cut the flowers one day and ship them the next. Twenty-four hours is not too long a time for the stems to be soaking up the water and if the shipper has ever seen the difference in the appearance of flowers so treated, and flowers shipped without having been in water, when they are unpacked, he will need no further advice on this subject. Let the receptacle in which the flowers are placed to soak up the water be large enough and deep enough so that the stems will be kept upright and not bent over. Then the water has a free passage direct to the flower.

In packing the flowers in the boxes do not be sparing of the tissue paper, as a mum badly bruised is a very hard proposition to sell at any price. Pack carefully and securely and have a little tissue paper between each flower to keep them from rubbing on each other. If the stems and foliage do not fill the box in the center, press them down and hold them fast by nailing a slat or two across inside the box, to prevent them from thrashing around.

A litte care spent in packing is time well spent, since the labor of months is represented in the flowers and if they get bruised and spoiled they may be set down as a dead loss. Brian Boru.

"TAKING" THE BUD.

"Taking the bud" of chrysanthemums is a technical term for the selection of buds likely to produce the finest blooms. There are many points to which the grower must give attention if he would achieve success in the cultivation of chrysanthemums, and one of the most, if not the most, important points is "taking" the bud, for, as all who have had experience with the culture of chrysanthemums know, the buds, to furnish first-class flowers, must be selected within a few days of the proper time for each variety, and more especially if required for exhibition. As so well known to experienced cultivators, the flower from a bud taken too early is rough and poor in color, whereas if the bud should be taken late, the flower will be of a good color, but greatly lacking in size. The buds of some varieties require to be taken early in August, while others, such as singles and pompons, as late as the end of September, but to know the varieties, and when the bud should be taken, also whether the crown or terminal bud is the best, can only really be learned by personal experience. To have first-class blooms the buds must be taken at the proper time, and the only way to bring this about is by studying the peculiarities of each individual variety that one is growing, i. e., the proper time the bud should be taken, also the length of time the plants take from their first natural break to the crown bud, and in some instances from the latter to the terminal. For example, the best colored flowers of Viviand-Morel are those from the terminal bud, and should be taken during the last week of August. To be able to do this, if the plants do not show their natural break by the first few days in May, the points should be taken out, which will cause the crown bud to show itself about July 20, and the terminal toward the end of August, this variety taking twelve weeks from first break to crown bud, and five weeks to the terminal, altogether seventeen weeks from its first break, or when it was stopped, to the terminal bud. "Taking the bud" is simply selecting the bud from which the bloom on each shoot is to be produced, and carefully removing the others.—Gardeners' Magazine.

CHRYSANTHEMUM SOCIETY.

In addition to the special premiums for the Boston exhibition published last week, as arranged for by the C. S. A., the following are arranged for by the Massachusetts Horticultural Society:

The Massachusetts Horticultural Society offers for the best fifty blooms of chrysanthemums of one or more varieties to be shown in the society's large china vases five special prizes, $60, $50, $40, $30 and $20.

The Gardeners' and Florists' Club, Boston, offers for twelve blooms of any chrysanthemum of current season's introduction in America, three special prizes, $25, $15 and $10.

William Nicholson, Framingham, Mass., offers for the best vase of 100 white carnations, a special prize of $10.

Patten & Co., Tewksbury, Mass., offer for the best vase of fifty blooms of Carnation Mrs. M. A. Patten, a special prize of $10.

Peter Fisher, Ellis, Mass., offers for the best vase of fifty blooms of Carnation Nelson Fisher, a special prize of $10.

Work of Committees.

There was one variety before the New York committee, Saturday, October 1, as follows: Merstham Yellow, exhibited by Wm. Duckham, Madison, N. J.; color canary yellow, Japanese, scored (new) commercial scale 90 points.

The variety, Mme. Clementine Touset, was exhibited by the E. G. Hill Co., Richmond, Ind., before the Cincinnati committee, Saturday, October 8; color white; Japanese, scored commercial scale, 90 points.

THE READERS' CORNER.

Retrogression or Progression?

It was at Kansas City, was it not, in 1902 that John Thorpe reverted? That is, reverted to the antediluvian method of staging chrysanthemums on mossed boards, without stems. In the same year the silver tongued E. Gurney Hill induced the Chrysanthemum Society to afford the weak-stemmed progeny of European raisers the poor support of a bamboo plant stake re-enforcement, ill-concealed beneath the foliage. So much for retrogression.

In which direction is the C. S. A. headed with its new scale. Is it progression? Not being a chrysanthemum grower, I do not know. I have a notion there will be a difference of opinion among those whose opinion is entitled to some little consideration. Let us put the old scales and the new side by side for comparison. Here they are:

Commercial Scale.	New.	Old.
Fullness	10	15
Foliage	15	10
Substance	15	10
Size	10	15
Total	100	100

Exhibition Scale.	New.	Old.
Depth	15	Dist 25

To one who looks at these scales from the vantage point of disinterestedness it seems that the new commercial scale is an improvement over the old. It seems that the points taken from form and fullness, and possibly color and size, were well bestowed upon stem and foliage and particularly upon substance in a flower under judgment as to its usefulness to the cut flower trade.

Looking at the exhibition scale, distinctiveness has been dropped. Does that mean that, in the estimation of the committee, the whole gamut has been run? Have the mum growers ceased to strive for variety? Is a striking novelty no longer of value? Is size the one consideration? I see it gets thirty-five points. But no, size cannot be all; form, fullness and depth get a total of forty-five points. That would make the ideal mum a pretty nearly round, incurved flower, would it not? Five points for stem and five for foliage looks like the Thorpe and Hill ideas had prevailed, but not Hill's, either, for he needs foliage to hide his stick. Evidently color doesn't cut much ice if only your exhibition mum is big enough.

It is a good thing to get these scales before the interested parties prior to their final adoption. The executives of the C. S. A. took it upon themselves to do this in an effectual way. I only mention this in passing to say that had the committee "with power to add to its numbers" been responsible for the use of a scale before its formal adoption it would by now be time for a number of estimable gentlemen to let off steam.

PEONY.

WORLD'S FAIR FLOWER SHOW.

The management of the St. Louis World's Fair is very desirous of having a flower show on the exposition grounds before the close of the chrysanthemum season. Overtures were made to the St. Louis Florists' Club looking to its coperation with the Department of Horticulture in an exhibition which should be on a scale commensurate with the extent of the exposition, but the proposition was not favorably received. It was then suggested that the Chrysanthemum Society of America lend its name to the undertaking. The proposition is still under consideration. The idea is to conduct the show along the lines of the World's Fair flower show at Chicago in 1893. Whether this can be done inside the exposition grounds—for it necessitates charging an extra admission fee to the show—remains to be seen. Otherwise the finances would have to be provided wholly by the World's Fair management. There should be little difficulty in securing the co-operation of the C. S. A., through its officers and executive committee, to the extent desired for any exhibition which would redound to the credit of the flower it represents. But quick work is necessary as the time is short. In case the show eventuates P. J. Hauswirth, of Chicago, is spoken of as superintendent.

Alocasia Regina.

ALOCASIA REGINA.

This beautiful species can be called a true alocasia. The following from Bailey's Cyclopedia of American Horticulture will give you some idea of its coloring and markings: "Dark green above, with darker veins and brown purple beneath; petioles terete, pubescent, spotted purple."

There is a little more than color description in the quotation above. It is one of the most handsome species of these most ornamental foliage hothouse plants. As it is a native of that great Island of Borneo, which lies under the equator, little need be said regarding the temperature that suits it. All the alocasias are from the torrid zone, Sumatra, Java, Borneo and the Philippine islands supplying most of the species. These alocasias do not enter much into the florists' business, but in private collections of plants, in the hothouses of the wealthy and in botanical gardens, there are few more ornamental plants.

A. Regina is an evergreen species, but the growth is not active in winter. About 60 degrees during the dark winter months will do and as the season advances and growth commences, which is March or April, the night temperature should be raised to 70 degrees. The day temperature is hard to control, but if it goes to 85 or 90 degrees it will only be relished by these tropical plants. Such a summer as the last, when during July it was below 50 degrees several times, will not do for the alocasias and fire heat would be necessary. A light shade in spring and summer should be given them. A warm, moist heat with abundance of water at the roots is the great essential and during their most active growth weak liquid manure can be given with benefit.

The pots should be filled at least half their depth with clean broken crocks to insure the most perfect drainage. The compost should be two-thirds fibrous peat and one-third turfy loam, but both of these should be in lumps, not finely broken up or sifted. Add to this some fresh sphagnum moss and a few pieces of charcoal. When potting or shifting keep the rhizomes and compost raised two or three inches above the rim of the pot and surface the compost with fresh, live sphagnum. As will be seen from the description of the compost, it is very similar to that which suits many of our orchids. They do not draw their sustenance so much from the ingredients of the soil as most of our terrestrial plants are supposed to do, as from the moisture held in the compost and the humidity of the atmosphere.

WILLIAM SCOTT.

FLOWERS OR VEGETABLES.

The Rural New Yorker publishes the subjoined replies to the following question by a reader:

We sometimes hear of glass gardeners who change from flower culture to vegetables, or give up growing vegetables for flowers. There must be some good reason for such changes, and we would like to know why they are usually made.

All such cases which have come under my observation almost invariably apply to men who had never had a proper training in gardening matters. By the word gardening I mean in its full sense, viz., the cultivation of plants, fruits and flowers, both under glass and outdoors. It quite frequently happens that a man will make a start in the florists' business by growing vegetables under glass, principally lettuce, radishes, etc., knowing full well that such subjects are much more easily handled than flowering or foliage plants. If successful with the first he may add another house or two for the growing of the latter, and if he succeeds here he may be tempted to go still further and attempt the growing of cut flowers, and this is usually the rock upon which such men either go to pieces or decide to return to the growing of vegetables. With regard to the other side of the question, the turning from flowers to vegetables, I really cannot offer a satisfactory explanation, excepting that sometimes the flower market is overdone in certain localities, and a grower sees that he can do better at growing vegetables. But here is a little of my own experience which may throw some light on the subject:

Up to 1900 I had been growing violets successfully for a period of nearly twenty years, but at that time my stock became badly diseased with the so-called leaf-spot, and every season since it has been growing worse, until at last I realized that if I did not wish to lose any more money in violet growing I would have to grow something else in the same space; consequently I have decided to drop violets entirely (at least for a few years) and to grow lettuce in the same space, for there is a good local demand for choice lettuce, and I feel sure it will pay me to cater to it. Here is another illustration: We have one house (without benches) which we devote to chrysanthemums, and these are always followed up with cauliflower. Last winter a friend connected with one of the leading hotels in New York induced me to send to said hotel a box of three dozen heads of cauliflower. Immediately upon unpacking the same the proprietor telegraphed for more, and later by letter offered me $3.50 per dozen heads for all I could grow, a better price than I could get here at retail. Now I am considering the advisability of giving up chrysanthemums and devoting the house to cauliflower entirely, or of building another house for the cauliflower crop. In either case you see I am pretty sure of a good market for the cauliflower at remunerative prices.

Jesse Robbins.

The largest grower of cut flowers in the United States, Peter Reinberg, of Chicago, began business under glass as a grower of vegetables, and it was doubtless due to a belief that the cut flower business promised greater profits that he ultimately changed to cut flowers. This alert man of business now owns nearly or quite one million square feet of glass, and is a shining example of the success that sometimes smiles upon the florist. Many men who now grow flowers began with vegetables because they needed quick returns for the investment, and a ready-money crop could be had in vegetables in less time than in flowers, but no hard and fast rule can be laid down for the beginner from the fact that so much depends upon locality and the available market. The latter conditions are unquestionably the chief factors in making a choice between these two branches of horticulture, though where equal opportunities are offered for each, it is probable that the flower end would give the greater profit, but would require a larger outlay and be consequently a greater risk. There are some growers who combine the two branches profitably, for example, Robert Klagge, of Michigan, who grows both cucumbers and violets very well, but I am unable to say which end of his business Mr. Klagge finds most profitable in proportion to the space occupied. I cannot recall an example of a cut flower man who changed to vegetable growing entirely, but have known of several who combined carnations, mushrooms and tomatoes in one establishment, the object being to get a quicker and larger return from their glass than was possible by growing one crop only. THE POINSETTIA.

[A paper by Charles W. Reimers, of Louisville, read before the Kentucky Society of Florists, October 2, 1904.]

With its very bright and imposing bracts, Poinsettia pulcherrima is classed in botany as euphorbia, a genus named in honor of Dr. Euphorbus. Its native home is Central America. It is nature's Christmas flower, a button hole for Santa Claus, and a corsage for Kris Kringle, a flower that will remain with us as long as we observe Christmas; in time I feel assured that it will come more in prominence than holly is today. Nothing is brighter and more cheerful than a large vase bouquet arranged with scarlet bracts on stems four and a half or five feet long and set up in a church, or in a hall, or in some suitable residence. Short-stemmed flowers as well as short plants can be worked to a great advantage for a table center-piece. There are numerous ways of beautifying a window with small plants in fern pans or jardinieres. It is a flower of profit in a commercial way; no one has ever heard of a market being over-stocked; every season you can see a steady gain and wonderful increasing demand. It will never come amiss, and every grower, no matter how small he is in commercial life, should have a stock of them, it adds so much to the beauty of a greenhouse when in bloom.

The poinsettia is very easily grown. Old plants that have been from January to the middle of April on a high, dry shelf in your shed, heeled in with a little soil and in a temperature never less than 60 degrees, no water, kept perfectly dry, should by the end of April be potted in a suitable sized pot, all depending on the size of the plant. Use rose soil from a bench that you had forced roses on, to which add some old hot-bed manure and a little sand and a little bone. See that your plants are potted firmly and given good drainage. Give them a good watering and place in a warm, light house and syringe daily. Cut back the old, long canes that may be on the plants to two or three eyes from the main stem. In six weeks you will have a crop of cuttings. Never take a cutting less than three inches long. In making them see that you will have one or two leaves on the stem that you have taken the cutting off of, and in eighteen or twenty days you will have another batch of cuttings. Trim the lower leaves off your cutting so as to avoid touching the sand. They should be syringed daily. Give them bottom heat, lots of shade and air. On hot, bright days give them a soaking every day. Morning and noon throw the water all over the house, under the benches and on the glass. In twenty days they will have from one-half to a quarter-inch root, which is the best time to pot, as you will find the roots very tender and therefore very apt to break.

Pot them in 2½ or 3-inch pots. Give them new made soil that you have prepared for roses and add a little sand and a trifle bone; pulverize and mix your soil; don't have it soggy; see that the drain hole is open. Place the plants in a light house, but shade for four days should it be bright; otherwise omit the shading. Give them a good watering and syringe every day and from then on all the air and light you possibly can and you will never be troubled with mealy bugs.

Once out of the first pot you can feed freely; let the last of September be the final. Treat your plants on benches the same way. Temperature to have good flowers should never be less than 65 degress and 70 degrees will be much better. Never cultivate the soil in beds or pots and never disturb the roots in potting or planting them; don't loosen the roots as you would when you plant rose plants. Never let them get pot bound; disturbing the roots at any time is very fatal and it is very important for you to be careful. Plants for benches should be out of 2½ or 3-inch pots. Follow the above closely and I can assure bracts eighteen or twenty inches in diameter.

Don't plant in benches or solid beds later than the middle or end of June. This holds good for the plants you take your cuttings from, or plants out of small pots. You can take cuttings from the old plants when planted in beds. Those taken middle of August to middle of September are the best cuttings for fern dishes and short pot plants. The canes off of the old plants can be made into cuttings, one eye at each end; place them in the sand firmly and water as you would your soft cuttings. It takes a little longer to root, but they make fine bracts.

To support the plants place two No. 18 galvanized wires one above the other, and right above the plants, with twenty-four inches space between them, running lengthwise with the bed. A few braces to stiffen the wire will be sufficient to hold your plants in position. Never use cane sticks, No. O wire for sticks in your pot plants is much better, as you will bruise some of the roots in doing this, and from the very start never bruise the bark of your plant or the roots, as the plant will bleed, which is very injurious at any stage of the game.

On December 10 stop watering and syringing; this hardens them and they will get into good shape to cut any time after December 20. If you want them sooner cease your watering accordingly. Don't take up your plants until January 1 and, whatever you do, don't give them any water, but have them perfectly dry. Take them up carefully, see that you don't bruise the roots, bunch them closely together and heel them in a bench in your shed.

Handling the Bracts.

I have tried every imaginable way of treating the cut bracts and I have obtained the best results, but with a little trouble. You have a small oil stove at the end of your greenhouse walk, with boiling water and cut your poinsettia the desired length. You want to be a little quick about this work as you want to get about three or four inches of the stem in the hot water; hold them in it about ten or fifteen seconds and take them right out into cold water. I find that by cutting just what one can handle, say six or eight of the long stems, you can have the ends together for the hot water. The idea is not to let your stems bleed, or as little as possible. Work this properly and your flower will not wilt.

Now, one other matter, and very important. If you cut a part of a stem after you have cured it, it will be necessary for you to go through the same process as you did when you cut them in the greenhouses. It would be well for all florists to remind cut flower buyers not to cut the poinsettia stem, or if they should, be sure to burn or boil three or four inches of the stem; also avoid a draught on them.

RUST ON CARNATIONS.

Will you kindly tell me of some remedy for rust on carnations. When I took the carnation plants from the field I found black spots on the leaves, which turn to a powder. I picked off all the diseased leaves before I benched the plants but have the same trouble again, especially on Flamingo, Enchantress and Wolcott. I am very careful in watering.

W. A.

I would advise you to keep the affected leaves picked off and dust the plants with air-slaked lime. Stop syringing except about once each week to keep down red spider. Do all you can to promote a strong, steady growth and your plants will soon be in shape to fight off the disease for themselves. This is not a dangerous disease like stem-rot or the leaf-spot but it is, of course, not desirable, either. A. F. J. Baur.

Lewis Ullrich.

LEWIS ULLRICH.

The subject of this brief sketch was born at Kerweiler, in Bavaria, in 1848, but was brought to America by his parents when he was in only his second year. The family resided at Monroeville, N. Y., for a time, but removed to Tiffin, Ohio, in 1862, and there Mr. Ullrich has made his home for forty-two years. He completed the public school course in 1866 and then went to Heidelberg, in Baden, to complete his education in the university founded in 1386 and restored in 1803, which is the oldest in Germany and one of the most famous in the world. Graduating there, he returned to Tiffin and devoted sixteen years to pharmacy. In 1874 he built his first greenhouse, a conservatory 15x20 for his mother's plants. At that time there was no florist in Tiffin and cut flowers were unknown to the many uses for which they are now so largelv employed. Six years later Mr. Ullrich bought a piece of ground in the suburbs and built two commercial houses, one 12x50, the other 25x50. Now he has about 50,000 feet of well kept glass, growing roses, carnations, violets, chrysanthemums and a few bedding plants. Ninety per cent of the product is sold wholesale to the florists of the vicinity. Mr. Ullrich is a participant in all local activities and has done much to widen the floricultural interests of his locality. At the same time he has earned for himself a place high in the regard of his neighbors, having served for several years as a member of the city council and three terms as county clerk. He has for years been an active member of the S. A. F. and of the American Carnation Society, so that he has a wider acquaintance in the trade than ordinarily falls to the lot of one whose business interests are so well centered. At the last meeting of the Carnation Society he delivered a speech at the banquet, to the toast "The Florist: He's a Jolly Good Fellow," which showed a rhetorical ability and a breadth of sentiment which placed the speaker in the front rank of our after-dinner orators.

A VISIT TO DUNLOP.

It was with pleasure that I read your article on John Dunlop's place, Toronto. Last winter, after leaving Detroit and the carnation show, I took a trip to Canada, visiting Toronto, Brampton and other places, and returning home via Buffalo and Cleveland. Yet my visit to Mr. Dunlop proved to be the star of the entire trip, this one being well worth the total cost of my travels. Mr. Dunlop proved so courteous, so obliging and his place so full of good points that a grower cannot leave him without acquiring material benefit. I would style him the prince of propagators, for he showed me a bench of American Beauty cuttings, where there was by test not an unrooted one nor a yellow leaf, nor a black spot, nor a red spider; simply perfection. It was the same with carnation cuttings. I wish we could get Mr. Dunlop to write us an article on propagating. I was so impressed with his quality of cuttings that upon returning home I sent him an order for Beauties and carnations. The result is that at this writing we have a magnificent lot of Beauties from his stock and his carnation plants can be picked out by the lustre on their foliage; they are as glistening as an onion patch.

Fred Windmiller.

A PACIFIC COAST FIRM.

One of the most enterprising of the many progressive firms on the Pacific coast is Clarke Bros., of Portland, Ore. They have long had a thriving business in their home town, but six years ago came to the conclusion that conditions were more favorable for cut flower growing at Fruitvale, Cal., in Alameda county, several hundred miles to the south, where they also had the advantage of a contiguous market for whatever they could produce beyond the requirements of their own trade. The Southern Pacific gives them a direct line of communication between the two ranges, for they built at Fruitvale, one of the brothers, Ralph, being in charge there. This summer he visited the home plant for the first time in six years.

In this issue of the Review we reproduce photographs of each range and regret that no picture of the retail store in Portland was available, for it is one of the most attractive in the west. The Portland plant now consists of eleven houses, five of them 26x200 and six 22x125, running at right angles. A part of this glass was put up this summer. There is in all about 42,000 square feet of glass. This fall about 20,000 carnation plants will be on the benches, with about 10,000 chrysanthemums grown to single stem, together with large quantities of miscelleanous stock raised for the retail store and for a catalogue trade which covers the whole northwest corner of the country. The range is heated by one Kroeschell hot water boiler and one sixty horse-power steam boiler. Wood is used as fuel.

The California plant consists of three houses 26x175, three 16x175 and four 26x140, with a propagating house 12x100. This makes a total of about 38,000 square feet of ground covered. Seven houses are devoted to carnations, 26,000 being housed. The varieties are equally Estelle, Lawson, Hill, Prosperity, Enchantress and Scott, the latter being grown on account of its unequaled shipping and producing qualities. There are three houses of Brides and Bridesmaids. There is also a lath house, 40x40, devoted to smilax and asparagus, producing annually 6,000 strings. Nearly all the product from this place is shipped to the retail store at Portland. The plant is heated by two thirty horse-power steam boilers, with crude oil for fuel, it being much cheaper than coal, besides making little or no smoke or soot to obscure the glass.

A NEW ENGLAND ESTATE.

One of the finest of the many and ever increasing number of private estates in New England is that of Senator T. B. Aldrich, at Warwick Neck, R. I. This is about an hour's sail from Providence and close to Rocky Point, one of the most popular shore resorts on the Providence river, a place noted for clam bakes, blue point oysters and sundry other attractions of a fashionable nature. The estate at Warwick Neck is of comparatively new formation, only some half dozen years having elapsed since it was taken in hand. In that time an immense amount of building, planting, road making and grading has been done under the superintendence of Fred C. Green, who has charge of this beautiful estate. The grounds cover an area of 125 acres, of which 100 acres are in lawns, necessitating a great deal of mowing.

The grounds are well wooded and include some fine specimen trees, selections from those on the several old estates which were merged into the present one. An immense amount of planting has been done, including thousands of maximum and hybrid rhododendrons and an extensive assortment of taxus, thuya, retinospora, ilex, thuyopsis, picea and other evergreens and a large collection of deciduous trees and shrubs. Much of the stock was imported from Europe and it is all in fine shape.

In the extensive kitchen garden adjoining Mr. Green's residence pleasing features are the broad grass walks bordered with choice perennials and annuals, which divide the various quarters, and espalier-trained apples, pears, plums and other fruits lined on one or two walks. Storage pits for tender evergreens, hydrangeas, etc., are located here and a block of houses will later be erected on land being reserved for that purpose.

A good many interesting memorial trees are dotted about the grounds. A thrifty elm taken from George Washington's old elm in Cambridge, Mass., was planted by President Roosevelt in 1902 and there are many senatorial trees.

The buildings are practically all of stone blasted from ledges on the estate. They comprise handsome stone lodges at the entrance gates, a magnificent boat house, bowling alley, stables, etc. A fine sea wall runs the whole length of the water's edge. The views from all points of the estate are magnificent, but the best outlook is from the top of the lofty water tower, where the panorama over Narragansett bay is superb. The water supply is from driven wells, the water being pumped into a 50,000 gallon tank.

Those who would like to see a really princely New England estate should visit Senator Aldrich's beautiful Rhode Island home and they cannot fail to be delighted with what they see. In Mr. Green the estate has undoubtedly the right manager and he has many improvements still to make. We do not wonder that the senator, his unassuming son-in-law, John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and other members of his family find a delightful retirement from political and other cares at Warwick Neck.

THE CALLA DISEASE.

The Bureau of Plant Industry of the Department of Agriculture has recently issued a bulletin on the soft rot of the calla lily which will be of interest to every calla grower, if not of as great practical assistance as had been hoped for by those who knew the work was in preparation. There is no doubt that the disease has brought great loss upon growers and it is to be regretted that four years of study by Prof. Townsend, much of his work being done in the greenhouses of A. B. Garden, at Anacostia, D. C., has not produced a more satisfactory result. "The successful treatment of the diseased plants was considered impracticable," writes the investigator, "and preventive measures were then resorted to. Fresh soil was obtained, also a new set of corms, but they were not planted directly in the bed. All that showed suspicious dark spots were discarded; the remainder were started in pots and transplanted. This made it possible to discard all plants which showed indications of disease after growth began.' That is simple but not eminently satisfactory to the grower who has paid good money for his bulbs and found the disease to develop in a very large proportion of them "after growth began."

There is, however, much of interest and value in the freely illustrated pamphlet of forty-four pages. The less technical parts follow:

Introduction.

Under favorable conditions the calla lily has heretofore been one of the most satisfactory plants produced either in the open or under glass. In most parts of the United States the calla will grow out of doors and will live and thrive from year to year even in the northern latitudes, especially if the corms (bulbs) are protected during the winter season. As a marketable product, however, it is more profitable if grown under glass, where under proper conditions the plants may be forced and the flowers consequently produced in great abundance at the time when they will be in greatest demand. It is under these conditions of forced growth that the plants seem to be most susceptible to disease.

The profits which arise from calla growing are derived either from the sale of the corms or of the flowers, or from both. A bed of a thousand corms, for example, will under normal conditions produce 5,000 flowers, which ordinarily will sell for about $1,000. (A very sanguine estimate.—Ed.) The corms are grown either in solid beds or in pots. As a rule the best results both as regards the size and number of flowers produced are obtained from the solid bed.

There are several diseases to which the calla is susceptible, but the most serious one with which the growers have had to contend is the soft rot that forms the subject of this bulletin. This disease has been reported from the Atlantic to the Pacific and has caused enormous losses to the growers, rendering the production of this hitherto profitable plant very uncertain. The soft rot of the calla was brought to the attention of the writer in the autumn of 1899, and it has been under his observation and study since that time.

Cause and Appearance.

Upon examining microscopically the decayed portions of the calla corms, myriads of bacteria were found to be present. These were separated in pure cultures and by repeated experiments were shown to be the cause of this destructive disease.

Several greenhouses where the disease was reported to be present were visited by the writer, who found the callas rotting off usually at or just below the surface of the ground, the disease sometimes extending down into the corm, sometimes upward into the leaves, and frequently in both directions. Occasionally the disease seemed to start in the edge of the leafstalk, in the flower stalk, or in some underground part of the corm, though as a rule it started at the top of the corm just above but near the surface of the ground. It was also noticed that the disease was worse and spread more rapidly in those houses where the callas were grown in solid beds.

When a diseased corm was cut open it was found that there was a distinct line between the healthy and the diseased portion of the corm. The healthy portion of the corm is firm and nearly white, while the diseased part has a decidedly brown color and is soft and watery. When the disease extends upward into the leaves it is the edge of the petiole that first becomes involved, the affected part becoming slimy without immediately losing its green color. As the disease progresses the edges of the leaf become pale, then brown. Pale spots becoming brown then appear in other parts of the leaf blade, and finally the whole leaf becomes brown and dead. Frequently the disease develops so rapidly that the leaf rots off at the base and falls over before it has time to lose its green color. When the disease has progressed far enough to attack the flower stalk, the flower turns brown and the stalk without having lost its color and frequently without having decayed upward more than a fraction of an inch, eventually falls over.

When the disease works downward through the corm it sooner or later reaches the roots, which become soft and slimy within, while the epidermis remains intact, thus presenting the appearance of thin-walled tubes filled with a soft substance. When the disease begins its attack below the surface of the ground the lower portion of the corm frequently rots away, causing the plant to fall over without having previously given any indication of disease. An examination of the decayed corm shows that only a small part of the upper portion of the corm, with a few side roots, remains. The latter become less and less numerous as the disease advances, until at last they are unable to support the weight of the leaves and flower stalks.

Spread of the Disease.

If the conditions for the development of the disease are unfavorable after the corms are affected, the softened spots will dry down, sinking below the surrounding portion of the corm and becoming darker colored. In these spots the disease will often remain dormant until the conditions for the development of the organism again become favorable. In this way the disease is carried over from season to season, and it may be transported long distances.

The spread of the disease from plant to plant in the same house seems to be accomplished mainly through the soil. Usually the first season that the disease appears only a few of the plants are actually destroyed, but the millions of organisms which are produced during the process of decay remain in the soil, and some of them reach corms that were perfectly healthy when planted.

The nature of the soil apparently has much to do with the spread of the disease in the bed. A soil that is rich in vegetable matter is a better medium for the organism to grow and spread in than a soil that is poor in such material. Furthermore, a soil filled with humus retains the moisture better than one that is lacking in vegetable matter, a condition that greatly aids the multiplication of the organism. It often happens that the roots reach from corm to corm through the soil of the solid bed. Usually the corms are placed about twelve inches apart each way, and it is not uncommon for the plants to produce roots from six to twelve inches in length.

Remedies.

Various methods have been used with the hope of finding some remedy by which the progress of the disease could be stopped after the plants became infected. The partly decayed corms were treated with two parts air-slaked lime, with one part sulphur, Bordeaux mixture, copper sulphate solution, etc. None of the treatments, however, was entirely successful. The lime and the lime and sulphur retarded the progress of the disease, but in a few cases only did the disease seem to be entirely eradicated. The solutions used appeared to make no impression upon the disease unless they were of sufficient strength to kill the plant. A few of the plants that were scraped and left without further treatment did not suffer further decay, but the percentage of cases of this kind was very low.

The successful treatment of the diseased plants in the bed was considered impracticable, and preventive measures were then resorted to. The soil was all removed from the solid bed in which practically all the callas had decayed, and this was replaced with fresh soil. At the proper time a new set of corms was obtained, but they were not planted directly in the bed. They were first carefully examined and all that showed suspicious dark-colored spots were discarded. The remainder were started in pots and then transplanted. This made it possible to discard all plants which showed any indication of the rot after growth began. As a result no disease appeared in the bed of 1,000 callas during the entire season. The same soil was used the second and third years and the same precautions were taken in regard to putting into the bed only healthy bulbs, so far as possible, with the result that while a few diseased plants appeared successful crops of callas were grown. Very little of the disease has appeared owing to the precautions that were taken in changing the soil and in selecting healthy corms.

It is safe, therefore, to state that the soft rot of the calla may be prevented or held in check sufficiently for all practical purposes by changing the soil every third or fourth year, depending upon the number of cases of rot that appear, and by exercising due caution in selecting only healthy plants for the bed. Diseased corms may often be detected, even in the dormant state, by examining for discolored spots, but it is safer to start the plants in pots, even after the corms having discolored areas have been rejected, to insure getting as few diseased plants as possible in the bed, since experience shows that some corms are so slightly affected that the disease is not easly detected in the dormant state. Some growers prefer to keep their plants in pots throughout the season as a preventive measure against the rot, but as a rule callas grown in this manner do not produce as large flowers as when grown in a solid bed.

Boston Ferns at J. R. Johnson's, Passaic, N. J.

BOSTONS AT PASSAIC.

New Jersey is noted for its rose factories, but none the less worthy are its plant growing establishments from the fact that they are less frequently spoken of. At Passaic one of the most successful, if not one of the largest growers, is J. R. Johnson, who does the Boston fern in first-class style. The accompanying illustration shows one of his houses of this ever more popular plant.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The black frost which closed last week effectually settled dahlias for the season, leaving only cosmos and some field-grown carnations of the outdoor flowers. The demand this week has been good, both in and out of town. Chrysanthemums are increasing rapidly in numbers. Prices are lower, of course, but so far have held exceptionally well, owing to the brisk demand. Roses, carnations and valley are good sellers, but the sale of violets appears to depend on the weather. There are quite a lot of orchids in the market. They are very useful for the weddings; so also is cosmos in a more modest way. Gardenias have made their appearance in numbers, both west and east of Sixteenth street, while at No. 11 South they have sweet peas. A few other features are good shipping orders for wild smilax, valley, etc., reported by the Leo Niessen Co., and a good demand for Beauties and some remarkably well-grown Glory of Pacific reported at S. S. Pennock's.

The Flower Market.

The second annual meeting of the stockholders of the Philadelphia Wholesale Flower Market will be held in the secretary's room at Horticultural Hall, Broad street below Locust, at 10 a. m., on Monday, October 17. The statement by the treasurer of the Market's business for the past year will be made and the election of three directors for three years each will be part of the business meeting. The directors whose terms expire are Alfred Burton, David Rust and Herbert G. Tull. It is understood that all three are candidates for re-election.

Mr. Tull and Mr. Burton have worked hard for the Market. Mr. Rust, who was but recently elected to fill an unexpired term, has given valuable assistance. Immediately after the meeting the stalls will be sold at auction at the Market, 1235 to 1237 Filbert street. The rental of each stall is $60 a year. The leases will run from November 1, 1904, to July 15, 1905.

Kennett.

The Baltimore Central Railroad is blocking the Wilmington-Oxford trolley, so that the southern terminus is now a country road a couple of squares outside of Avondale. These trolleys run, or rather whizz, along every hour, an infrequent schedule, which compelled D. T. Conner and Phil to omit a number of places, notably Roney Bros. and Connell.

at West Grove, Joseph Renard & Sons, at Avondale, that the pair would like to have seen and to whizz past Isaac Larkins' and Bancroft's into the town of Kennett.

Kennett is famous as being the home of Bayard Taylor and of William Swayne. To the latter place the visitors at once repaired. There they found the genial Mr. Swayne, hard at work with his force of men in one of the carnation houses, looking not a day older than when Phil last saw him there ten years before. Well might he sing

"Men may come and men may go,
But I go on forever."

There have been changes at Kennett in these ten years. Some familiar faces have gone and some are here, but in other paths.

Mr. Swayne's place looked remarkably well. At that time some carnation houses were planted. Mrs. M. A. Patten and Boston Market were in excellent condition. Many of the other varieties were still in the field, awaiting a little drying out. They have since been planted and are now ready for their winter's work. A large number of the best varieties are grown, both for the flowers and for rooted cuttings, an important branch of the business.

There are a half dozen or more houses of chrysanthemums, chiefly early and midseason sorts, which can be marketed in time for other crops to follow. All the chrysanthemums were in fine condition. Kept apparently on the dry side, they were close-jointed, with foliage down to the ground and all neatly disbudded, a pretty sight. Mrs. Kalb, white, is the earliest sort here. It was cut September 28. Glory of Pacific with its sports, Estelle, Polly Rose and Cremo, new, are important factors. Ivory on the front benches, where there is little head room, is here in quantity. Then there are Colonel Appleton, white and yellow Bonnaffon and several others. An evener, healthier lot could not be desired. Mushrooms are grown and shipped to several eastern markets. There are also some violets.

After Mr. Conner had had a few words about the details of the new house which his company has furnished, and Mr. Swayne had said a few kind words about both the senior and junior partners of William J. Baker & Co., who handle his Philadelphia shipments, the visitors said farewell.

Next came a call on Hicks & Son. All the flowers cut on this thriving place are shipped to the Leo Niessen Co. The junior received his callers cordially and showed them the carnations and mushrooms, both just starting nicely. Mr. Hicks apologized for not having the newer and fancy carnations. Anybody who can grow Portia, McGowan, et al, so well need not apologize for sticking to them. Everybody can't. Show horses are all right; work horses are mighty useful. Both McGowan and Portia looked just as well here today as ten years ago; that is something to be proud of, too. A peep at the mushrooms, a word with Mr. Hicks, Sr., and the Philadelphians were off as the shadows lengthened to catch the late afternoon train for home. Success to Chester county and all its florists.

Doylestown.

Charles Fox and Fred Ehret spent a pleasant afternoon in the county seat of Buck's county last week. They spent a couple of hours with John F. Andre and report his Brides, Maids and Beauties in tip-top condition. They also visited E. B. Darlington's, of Burpee & Co., who has seven houses devoted to cut flowers and greens, and Nelson Snedeker, who grows roses and other flowers. The stock on both these places gave promise of good results.

Various Notes.

C. F. Edgar has resigned from the firm of Charles F. Edgar & Co. The business will be carried on with vigor by R. C. Hayden, who is secretary and treasurer, and William Muth, manager. Mr. Hayden has been in the firm since it was organized as C. A. Dunn & Co. His connection with the new firm is a guarantee of its financial responsibility. Mr. Muth has had experience and is a hustler who should make his mark. The name of the new firm is the Philadelphia Cut Flower Co.

An auction sale of foliage plants was held on Wednesday and Thursday at Forty-ninth and Market streets. John P. Cleary sold stock of Robert Craig & Son, William K. Harris and John and W. H. Westcott under the hammer. A number of out-of-town buyers were present.

L. R. Hancock, of Burlington, N. J., is sending fine Glory of Pacific and Polly Rose chrysanthemums to the Leo Niessen Co.

Casher and Geo. L. Pennock, of Lansdowne, are sending exceptionally fine Golden Gates to their brother, S. S. Pennock.

Henry J. Faust, of Merion, is sending fine Kaiserins and Adiantum Croweanum to Fred Ehret.

Jasper Lorimer, of Croydon, is sending giant daisies, both yellow and white, to the Flower Market.

Paul Richter, of the Henry F. Michell Co., states that John Kuhn, of Fifth and Tabor streets, has a fine lot of field-grown Dracæna indivisa.

A. J. Pennock has been sending some heavy shipments of his royal strain of valley to S. S. Pennock.

W. and Harry F. Evans, of Rowlandville, are sending four Cs, choice chrysanthemums, carnations, and Caiserins to the Leo Niessen Co.

J. J. Habermehl's Sons have been very busy with decorating lately.

Edward Reid is justly proud of several letters received from cities to which his flowers have been shipped. One from Charlotte, N. C., was very encouraging, another from Charleston, S. C., also most gratifying. Mr. Reid is receiving fine carnations, valley and chrysanthemums.

Eugene Bernheimer has been willing to talk yellow chrysanthemums to his chosen friends, a subject that very few wholesalers have found very interesting so far. He is also handling nice Polly Rose and Glory of Pacific.

William J. Baker's chrysanthemums sold so well on Saturday and Monday that he didn't have to unpack them. Just think of that!

Albert Woltemate read a paper on hardy herbaceous plants before the Germantown Horticultural Society in Association Hall on Monday evening.

"Germantown's Rare and Notable Plants" is the title of an attractive little booklet just published by E. C. Jellett. There are many good photographs, including a fine oak on Rabbit Lane, the late L. C. Baumann, Wakefield, and George Redles.

Nearly every man in town says he has seen "the rare bug" described in last week's REVIEW. It is not curious that some men should have seen, or should have thought they had seen, this bug or one of its kind, but that so many men should think they had seen it and say so is most remarkable. PHIL.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

This week opens with a return to almost summer temperature. The effect upon the market can easily be imagined. This, with the flood of chrysanthemums, makes a further postponement of the fall season inevitable.

The last week's business was rather more encouraging. The cooler weather, with its effect upon the outdoor flowers, made a shortage in supply that reflected favorably upon the rose and carnation demand. The retail windows are brilliant with chrysanthemums and autumn leaves and a general appreciation of the value of artistic decoration is evident in every part of the city. Asters, dahlias, and gladioli have departed. They certainly held the center of the stage beyond their allotted time and can well be spared.

Roses and carnations are coming in splendidly and the best stock is gradually appreciating in price. Orchids are again abundant but never in excess of the demand. Violets have improved in quality but the large shipments and the light call for them keep the price for the best down to 50 cents per 100.

Club Meeting.

The monthly meeting of the New York Florists's Club was held on Monday evening, President Traendly in the chair and over forty members present. The final report of the outing committee was read, showing a satisfactory balance. A belated report of transportation was made by Chairman O'Mara, who also read the elaborate reports upon the visits of the investigating committee at the establishments of the F. R. Pierson Co., of Tarrytown, A. L. Miller, of Brooklyn, and John Scott, of Flatbush. A discussion arose as to the granting of a gold medal to Mr. Scott, the recommendation of the committee granting the silver medal as the highest possible award of the club being finally adopted. A silver medal was also given to F. R. Pierson Co. for their sport of Piersoni.

Jos. Fenrich and J. H. Pepper were elected members of the club and John Scott proposed J. H. Kemper, Peter Wagner, F. A. Lord, Robert Wilson and Herman Dreyer. One of the members suggested an award of a gold medal to Mr. Scott for so creditable a demonstration of practical interest in the club's welfare.

Committees were appointed to draw up suitable resolutions on the deaths of three of the club's members, Dean Hole, an honorary member; John Reickert and J. B. Hyatt. The Vilmorin memorial in Paris was discussed by H. Beaulieu.

The exhibition of flowers was not as extensive as expected, no gladioli or asters being left. Mr. Beaulieu showed dahlias. A new fern was shown by Bruce Butterton, gardener for E. J. Berwin, of Newport, an adiantum somewhat like Croweanum, a further exhibit being asked for by the committee and further inspection before an expression of opinion could be intelligently given. Wm. Duckham's exhibit of new chrysanthemums earned the thanks of the club. The committee of awards especially noted the earliness of the varieties and their great commercial value. Elsie Fulton is a French variety distributed in England, very early, of good size, twelve inches in diameter, extra heavy and of rare purity of color. The immense Merstham Yellow is from Australian seed raised in England, was perfectly formed and ready for exhibition as early as October 1. It has a perfect stem and foliage and the flowers exhibited were grown in 6-inch pots. The stock of both varieties will be distributed through C. H. Totty, of Madison, N. J.

The second Monday in November will be chrysanthemum night at the club rooms and the largest exhibit of the year should then be made. Special nights will continue until the end of the year, at one of which the ladies will again be welcome. The average attendance for 1904 to date has been about seventy-five, the best record in the club's history.

Various Notes.

William Siebrecht, of Astoria, whose son is an electrician, is quite in the fashion with his new automobile, rendered safe by the possession of a chauffeur in the family.

Much sympathy is felt for James Hammond in the loss of his only daughter. The funeral from St. Michael's church last Wednesday was largely attended and the floral offerings were numerous and beautiful, many of his brother wholesalers sending handsome remembrances.

Two very handsome windows of Scottii fern grace the entrance to the completed orchid emporium of James McManus.

C. W. Ward, of the Cottage Gardens Co., Queens, is expected home from Europe on Saturday.

M. A. Bowe had some fine designs at the reception to Mme. Schuman-Heink at the opening of the Broadway Theater last week. A star ten feet high of American Beauties on an easel, with a center crown of Liberties and white carnations; the German and American flags in scarlet carnations, lily of the valley and violets, also a laurel wreath, were conspicuous.

A visit to the immense palm factory at Carlton Hill, N. J., found the head of the house, Julius Roehrs, Sr., back from his European tour in splendid health and quite enthusiastic over recent importations, especially the new standard pyramid bays called Kaiser Kronen, a decided novelty. Twenty-seven houses are now devoted to orchids, of which Mr. Roehrs has several hundred varieties.

One of Reed & Keller's latest novelties is a small folding ball, for which a great demand is already developed.

Jos. Millang, manager of the New York Cut Flower Co., has been rearranging his floor space so that all offices are now located at the sides and the whole room is open, thus adding greatly to the efficiency of the service.

Wm. Ghormley is installing a new and much larger ice box fitted with electric lights and divided so that different temperatures are maintained in its separate compartments. Mr. Ghormley's health is greatly improved and he is on deck daily.

Young & Nugent's new store is now complete and its decorations and facilities are of the best and its window displays of orchids daily most attractive. A setting of 300 cattleyas last week was a feature. Mr. Nugent's father, John B. Nugent, Sr., has recovered from a serious illness.

"Jack" Gallatin, who was at one time in the florists' business on Fifth avenue, is now a full fledged actor in the Baroness Fiddlesticks company.

Last week in Dard's eight-story apartment house, 341 Madison avenue, the ground floor of which is occupied by his fine store, a gas explosion occurred that threatened serious consequences for a time.

Brooklyn's interest in floriculture seems to be increasing if one may judge by the number of new stores opening on Fulton street. At 5901 Phillips & Filchett have a very pretty place in the theater section and a few blocks above, Robert G. Wilson, at the corner of Greene avenue, has one of the largest and most artistically decorated establishments in the city. A new greenhouse is now being constructed at the back and the mirror effects, with birch bark trimmings covering the walls of the entire store, are a credit to Mr. Wilson's taste and originality.

The annual exhibition of the American Institue of New York, November 10 to 17, promises to be one of the greatest ever seen in this city. Great preparations are in progress and a large interest is developing, not only in this vicinity but in many adjoining states. With no conflicting dates, it should land at the head of the procession.

A live count from sunny Italy gives tone to the force in one of the wholesale and retail stores on Twenty-eighth street.

Guttman's and Weber's new red carnation, No. 3 seedling, has touched 6 cents during the past week. The supply is yet limited.

Geo. Cotsonas & Co. have moved to their main store, 45 West Twenty-ninth street, retaining their branch at 53 West Twenty-eighth street. They report a good trade and are much pleased with their new quarters.

Bowling.

The preliminary meeting of the New York Florists' Bowling Club took place on Friday evening and the attendance was quite encouraging. A permanent place of meeting has not yet been secured. The prospects for a large membership are good and the best possible selection of alleys and evening satisfactory to the majority will be made. The scores last week were:

Match games with Madison, Flatbush and Hoboken will shortly be arranged.

Bowling at Flatbush.

Last Thursday evening was a gala night at the Flatbush Bowling Club, the members of the plant investigating committee joining the local bowlers and making a hilarious night of it. The preliminary dinner of the committee, with champagne accompaniments, seemed to have contrary effects upon its members, some of the scores made being really "unfit for publication," but here they are:

NEW PLANTS.

When novelties in the plant line are exhibited before the New York Florists' Club a committee is appointed to visit the place where the plant may be seen growing before a final award is made. The committee, consisting of P. O'Mara, A. H. Langjahr, Chas. Lenker, W. H. Siebrecht, John Dowsett, A. L. Miller and John Birnie made the following reports at the club meeting October 10:

The Pierson Fern.

Pursuant to the request of the F. R. Pierson Co., of Tarrytown, N. Y., the committee of award visited the establishment of that firm on September 19 to inspect the stock of their new fern, the initial exhibit of this having been made at the June meeting of the club. Six members of the committee were in attendance, also the president, as ex-officio member.

The fern is as yet unnamed, so we cannot designate it in this report except as a sport from Nephrolepis Piersoni. The committee made a thorough examination of all the stock, both in pots and on the benches where it is planted out. It is essentially different from its parent. The fronds are shorter and broader, the habit is denser and more compact, and the general character of the plant is much superior to it.

The average width of the fronds in 8-inch pans is nine to ten inches at the widest point; the average length of the fronds being twenty-two to twenty-four inches. The number of character fronds per pan varied from twenty-two to twenty-four inches. The average number of pinnae per frond is forty-five. The width of the individual pinna is three and one-half inches. The length from tip to tip is four and one-half to five inches when fully developed. The details given were noted from plants which were about three months in the pans.

The greatest distinctive feature of this new fern are, first, the deeply cut formation of the individual pinna and the manner in which they are borne on the frond. Instead of being placed so that the edges are toward the surface of the ground, as is usual with ferns, and for the most part with Nephrolepis Piersoni, the pinnae on the new fern are so disposed that the surface is parallel with the ground surface when the fronds are erect. The result is that the fronds are equally ornate, whether viewed from the back or front, a very valuable characteristic.

The character of this variety seems to be well established, the tendency to reversion, although present, being scarcely noticeable. After carefully considering the variety the committee unanimously agreed that it was worthy of the club's silver medal, and herewith recommend that it be awarded.

The Scott Fern.

The committee of award visited the establishment of John Scott, of Flatbush, N. Y., on October 6, for the purpose of inspecting the stock of his new fern, Nephrolepis Scottii. Seven members of the committee attended, also the president and vice-president of the club.

The initial exhibit of this fern was made at the rooms of the club at the November meeting, 1903. The committee which examined it at that time was so favorably impressed by it that they unhesitatingly awarded it a certificate of merit and did not ask to see it growing. A request to examine the stock was only recently sent to the club by the exhibitor.

The committee made a thorough examination of the stock, both in pots and on the bench, and were highly pleased at its condition and character. It was growing in all sizes, from plants in 4-inch pots up to specimen plants in tubs, and it was absolutely uniform in all grades, the characteristics of the large specimen plants being evident in the smallest specimens on the place. The most careful examination failed to discover any tendency whatever toward reversion, and it seems as if the character of the plant is absolutely and indelibly fixed. It is in essence a condensed form of the Boston fern with valuable characteristics added which are not evident in the parent. The committee took one plant in an 8-inch pot and found by actual count that there were 200 fronds on it, not counting the undeveloped and small ones which were in the center of the plant. The fronds on the plant in question averaged about twenty inches long and two inches wide at the widest point, so that the pinnae are very closely set, so that they overlap, making a more finished frond than the parent. The plant in question had a spread of three feet. Plants in 4-inch pots showed a spread of eighteen inches and a height of ten to twelve inches.

The committee was unanimously of the opinion that it is a most valuable introduction; that it will become a plant for the florists to grow universally. It has a crispness and hardness about it which is superior to the parent, and is one of its very valuable characteristics. It propagates very freely and because of the fact that its character is established in the smallest size it should find ready sale in all grades. After a thorough examination the committee unanimously agreed that it was worthy of the highest award by the club, and therefore voted that it be awarded the silver medal of the club, and herewith record same for your approval.

The Miller Dahlia.

The committee of award visited the establishment of A. L. Miller, Jamaica, N. Y., on September 28, on request of that gentleman, to inspect his stock of a white dahlia which he exhibited at the September meeting of the club. Four members of the committee were present. The committee was informed by the exhibitor that the variety was imported from Germany under the name of Kaiserin Augusta Victoria. The committee, under the rules, is not empowered to grant certificates of award or medals to any but new varieties, that is, varieties not yet in commerce. The members of the committee were pleased to see the variety growing and were unanimously of the opinion that it is a very valuable sort. It is a decorative dahlia of the purest white, size four to four and one-half inches in diameter, double, showing the center when fully expanded. The plant grows three to three and one-half feet high, sturdy, compact habit, does not require staking. The profusion of bloom is remarkable, the rows being one mass of flowers, far more per plant than any other sort in the field. It is unquestionably a valuable addition to the race and where white summer flowers are wanted will prove of great value.

COLUMBUS, OHIO.

A meeting of the Columbus Florists' Club was held October 4. The election of officers resulted: President, Sherman Stephans; secretary, James McKeller; treasurer, Gus Drobisch.

The committee of three, composed of Sherman Stephans, James McKeller and Albert Knopf, was instructed to make all arrangements necessary for an exhibition of chrysanthemums to be held in November, 1905. It was suggested that arrangements be made with some one of the large charitable institutions of the city for its aid in the exhibition, each organization to take half the profits. School children will be given plants to be grown on for exhibition. The Civic Improvement Society came in for commendation.

BOSTON.

The Market.

The market took on something like an old-time boom during the past week, the supply not being equal to the demand in some of the staples. An increasing quantity of stock is coming in but all good material is eagerly snapped up. American Beauties have brought $5 per dozen for the best. The quality of all roses is much improved. Best Brides and Maids have sold readily at $10. W. H. Elliott, Waban Conservatories and one or two other growers are sending in some grand Kaiserins and Carnots with splendid stems. These sell well. Carnations have advanced considerably, extra quality of Fair Maid, Enchantress and one or two other sorts going as high as $6. Quality of these now leaves little to be desired.

Chrysanthemums are not yet very plentiful. Most growers report their flowers a little later than usual. In addition to Fitzwygram, Bergmann and Girard several other sorts have appeared, including Monrovia, Glory of Pacific, Polly Rose, Miss Alice Byron, a very useful white; Ethel Fitzroy and Merry Monarch.

Violets improve in size and color as well as in quantity. All are yet Princess of Wales, although a few doubles are seen around the stores, looking very miserable alongside the singles. Lily of the valley holds former prices. A few tuberoses still come in, while new crop sweet peas have arrived. Asparagus, smilax and adiantum show a slightly hardening tendency.

Various Notes.

Hitchings & Co., 819 Tremont building, Boston, have recently closed contracts to build the following greenhouses: Miss Helen Holmes, Kingston, Mass., one house; G. S. Scott, Belmead, Newport, greenhouse and workroom; G. F. Falford, Brockville, Ont., one house; J. W. Gibbs, Brookline, Mass., conservatory; G. N. L. Abbott, Concord, Mass., one house; S. W. Robbins, Wethersfield, Conn., one house.

The Boston Flower Mission, which concluded its season's labors on October 7, distributed over 30,000 bouquets among the poor and sick of the city during the five months it was in active operation. The work this excellent body of lady workers performs each year helps to brighten many a poor home.

Intending exhibitors can obtain copies of the schedule of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, with the list of the society's premiums for the coming chrysanthemum show from the secretary, W. P. Rich, 300 Massachusetts avenue, Boston. A list of special prizes is also issued. The full prize list of the society for the spring show of 1905, when the American Rose Society meets in Boston, may also be had upon application.

Weddings, funerals and receptions to the delegates of the International Peace Congress and the Episcopal Triennial Convention, in which latter the Archbishop of Canterbury was the most prominent figure, have helped to make a first-class market of late and prices are very much better than a year ago.

The Gardeners' and Florists' Club will assist in entertaining visiting members of the C. S. A. next month. All indications point to a splendid show. Some superb plants will be shown, while the prospects of entries for cut flowers from this section were never better. Boston means to eclipse the New York show of 1903.

No New England fair equals that annually given at Brockton. It is the Mecca for lovers of horse flesh and the triumphs of agriculture. Horticulture was this year but indifferently represented. Early frosts had destroyed nearly all dahlias, which usually make a star feature. Exhibits of these were made by F. L. Tinkham and A. G. Tinkham, of Brockton, and H. A. Jahn and A. C. Church, of New Bedford. Plants were not largely shown, M. Moir having the best display. In designs C. A. Reed took first and fourth, M. Moir second and Mrs. A. Younger third. A miserable pittance of less than $100 was this year allotted to plants and flowers, while horse flesh had over $25,000. In spite of wet weather on the principal day over 120,000 persons paid admission on the five days the fair was open, gate receipts alone exceeding $40,000.

The second cold snap of the season came on October 7, temperature falling to from 16 to 20 degrees above zero. Any remaining outdoor flowers in warm locations were wiped out.

The next meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club occurs on Tuesday, October 18. As there will be much important business, all members are urged to attend.

J. W. Foote's new pink seedling carnation is commanding top prices at the new market. Robert Montgomery's roses at the same stand are extra fine.

E. W. Gilmore, who died at North Easton on October 9, aged 76 years, was at one time a very successful exhibitor of stove plants and orchids at the Boston shows. A dozen years ago he had the best masdevallias we have seen in America. He was also especially successful in the culture of odontoglossums and miltonias. Mr. Gilmore was a life member of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society. He leaves a widow, one daughter and four sons.

Not the least pleasing feature of the coming chryanthemum show will be a chrysanthemum dinner tendered by the Massachusetts Horticultural Society to the visiting members of the C. S. A. The committee of arrangements of the society has this matter in charge.

Warren W. Rawson, of Arlington, easily defeated his opponent in the preliminary contest in the third Massachusetts district, pulling nearly twice as many votes. His election would seem to be practically certain.

The Market.

The weather for the past week has been unseasonably warm, the daily temperature from 15 to 20 degrees above the normal. The result has been that all stock has been forced along at a very rapid pace and accumulations have become burdensome in the wholesale houses. The demand is holding up to previous reports, but is not sufficient to consume the receipts in any line.

The Beauty growers are nearly all cutting first-class stock in all lengths of stem, although few shorts are seen. The best grade goes as high as $3 to $4 per dozen, but averages are not nearly so good as a week ago. There are plenty of good Brides, Maids, Liberty and Chatenay for all needs, also some extra good Kaiserin. Some of the extra select are bringing above quoted rates, but there is a large proportion of each day's receipts which are very near rubbish and must be sold in quantity at prices to bring down the average to a very low figure.

Carnations seem to be holding their own better than any other flower. Receipts are large, but some days demand is active and the stock is cleaned out to better results than the rest of the staples.

Chrysanthemums are coming in heavily and the wholesalers find it difficult to move them all. The result is that prices on good stock are going down considerably faster than is usual at the opening of the season.

There are large quantities of Campbell violets and it is almost impossible to move them. The retailers say that they can be used only in funeral work and average returns to the growers are in keeping with the very poor results obtained last year. Singles do only a little better. New York violets again have the call.

The absence of frost has resulted in some very fine dahlias and these are doing as well as could be expected with the market so heavily burdened with other material. There are also large quantities of cosmos of very fine quality, which is a good seller for decorations, although prices must necessarily be low. The fall openings have made a very good demand for long strings of asparagus and the fall weddings are calling for smilax, which is very plentiful.

Tuesday was cool and wet, a very dull day. The weather man predicts cold weather, which will shorten receipts and stiffen prices.

Flower Show Matters.

There was a meeting of the executive committee of the Horticultural Society and the Chicago Florists' Club at the Union Saturday evening, at which flower show matters were talked over and a number of committees appointed to further the work. A successful exhibition November 15 to 19 now seems assured. It was announced that the following slate of officers had been determined upon for the Horticultural Society: President, Edward G. Uihlein; chairman finance committee, Charles A. Hutchinson; vice-presidents, H. G. Selfridge and Ernst Wienhoeber; secretary and treasurer, Willis N. Rudd. These officers were duly elected at a meeting of the Horticultural Society at the Auditorium on Tuesday afternoon.

There is much renewed discussion for a permanent horticultural hall and a possibility that it may be eventually attained on the lake front.

Carnation Convention.

The Florists' Club will hold its regular meeting this evening and President Rudd will announce the general committee on entertainment of the Carnation Society, as follows: J. C. Vaughan, P. J. Hauswirth and Leonard Kill. They have authority to appoint all necessary sub-committees. The management of the exhibition will probably be placed in the hands of Mr. Hauswirth by the officers of the Carnation Society.

Various Notes.

The Geo. Wittbold Co. has had a busy season. At their city establishment they have built a large new house for decorative plants, that end of their business having grown to large proportions. They have also rebuilt their Buckingham place store and put it in first-class shape. They recently purchased a battery of five steam boilers taken from the Woman's Temple and are installing two at Edgebrook and two at the city place. Not only is retail trade good with them, but Louis Wittbold says that the wholesale plant business for the past three months has been the largest in the history of the concern. Next year they propose to rebuild another large section of the city range.

E. S. Thompson, of South Haven, Mich., is sending J. A. Budlong a large cut of very fine dahlias. The season has been most favorable on the Michigan shore and Mr. Thompson says that not in years has he had such good results.

The Kennicott Bros. Co. is receiving white orchids which are in good demand for choice wedding and funeral work.

Frank Garland has given up his city wholesale store and M. Winandy now is the only occupant of room 218, 52 Wabash avenue. Mr. Garland's crops are going to Percy Jones in the Growers' Market.

Weiland & Risch have been expending a considerable sum of money in building sewers to take care of the water at their boiler rooms. Quicksand has been giving them a great deal of trouble.

E. F. Winterson Co. is making a specialty of autumn foliage, which the retailers are using in window decorations with chrysanthemums. They have a soft ilex, well berried, which is very useful. Mr. Winterson spent Sunday at Dubuque and Des Moines.

Vaughan & Sperry are receiving large quantities of chrysanthemums and violets from Grand Rapids. The mums have sold well but buyers have to be coaxed to take violets.

Peter Reinberg is erecting a fine new residence adjoining his present home on Robey street. The removal of two greenhouses was necessary to make room.

Thomas Allen, out Bowmanville way, is not a large grower in comparison to the establishments of some of his neighbors, but there is none of them who can give him points on growing Beauties. He is cutting practically no short stems and a great many which are five feet long, with buds in proportion. J. A. Budlong sells his cut.

Edgar Sanders was 78 years of age on Monday. His health is generally good, although he does not go far from the house.

Lubliner & Trinz have abandoned their place on Jackson boulevard. Graff & Trinz have opened a store at 90 Washington street.

Mrs. Fred Stollery has returned from a visit of several weeks with relatives in California.

Singler Bros. are building a new brick stack to take the place of the one destroyed by the big storm last spring.

Mr. Jahn, of New York, imported by O. J. Friedman, has resigned, having married Miss Butler, formerly Friedman's right hand man and now in business for herself on Dearborn street.

W. E. Lynch, of E. H. Hunt's, is on a trip to eastern sources of supply.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The past week the wholesale houses had plenty of cut stock for all demands. The warm weather combined with dull trade was responsible for this big increase and small glut. We need much cooler weather to stimulate retail activity in the cut flower trade. Of course, there is a big lot of decorating going on every day about town and at the World's Fair, which keeps some of the boys busy, especially those who make a specialty of that kind of work.

We are pleased to note more activity at the wholesale house and the store men are buying more than usual. There is a good demand for all kinds of roses, especially Beauties with medium stems, which seem quite plentiful at $1 and $2 per dozen. Extra long-stemmed Beauties are also good sellers but scarce at $4 per dozen. Carnations are in strong demand and first-class blooms are being offered. Fancy stock is now up to $2 per 100, fair stock $1.50 and common $1 per 100. Enchantress is coming in fine and so is Boston Market. In pink Joost is best. Lawson is good in flower but very short in stem.

Chrysanthemum blooms are somewhat late, still a few are coming in every day, but not near enough to supply the wants. The best of these brought $3 per dozen, small white $1 and $2 per dozen. By the end of this week the market will be in good supply of all varieties. Cosmos now brightens the show windows of the florists, though the demand is not very brisk. The price is 25 and 35 cents per 100. Lily of the valley is in good supply at $3 and $4 per 100. Violets are coming in more plentifully every day, but of poor quality at 25 and 35 cents per 100. Tuberose stalks are still selling well at 3 and 4 cents. Some very fine pink and yellow dahlias are in the market at $1 and $2 per 100. There are plenty of greens.

Various Notes.

We had with us the past week Harry May and sister, son and daughter of John N. May, of Summit, N. J. They will remain ten days and then visit Chicago. Mr. and Mrs. Peter Reinberg were down for Chicago Day at the World's Fair. J. D. Preussner, of Galveston, Texas, and C. H. Foreman, of Louisiana, Mo., also were recent visitors. Paul Berkowitz, of H. Bayersdorfer & Co., Philadelphia, spent a week here and left Sunday for Pittsburg, taking with him a well filled order book.

Jabes Gadd, formerly with C. Young & Sons Co., is now with Theo. Miller, on Delmar boulevard.

Walter Sanders, son of C. C. Sanders, left last week for the west. Walter wants to see what the great west has in store for the young man. He has the best wishes of the trade, wherever he lands.

J. F. Ammann, of Edwardsville, E. W. Guy, of Belleville, and C. A. Kuehn, of St. Louis, visited the Springfield, Ill., fair a week ago. All made friendly calls on the trade at that place.

The Louisiana Purchase Exposition Co. report that they will not restore Forest Park at the close of the exposition, but will improve it to make it one of the finest pleasure grounds in the world. This decision was reached at a meeting of the directors and the city officials held last week.

Horticultural Day at the World's Fair last Tuesday attracted a great crowd. The big building was decorated in grand style. It was estimated that about 1,000 barrels of apples were given away. Mr. Hadkinson and Chief Taylor are greatly pleased at the reception given their department by the general public.

Henry G. Berning, who spent a week at Oakville, Ill., taking baths at this famous resort, has returned much improved in health.

A. Stonewall Tesson, brother of Robt. F. Tesson, died Saturday morning of heart failure. The funeral took place Sunday afternoon from the family residence in Clayton. Robert has the sympathy of his fellow craftsmen in the trade.

Fred Dorner, Jr., and Mrs. Dorner of Lafayette, Ind., have been taking in the World's Fair. Arthur Cowee, of Berlin, N. Y., is still here but will return home next week, having finished up his work at the World's Fair.

Bowling.

The florists continued their bowling on Monday night, with no handicaps. Good hard work through the winter should put them in good trim for the annual contest at Washington.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

Business during the past week was good in spots only. Mums are fast becoming the flower of the day. They are coming by the hundreds, but as yet there are no fancy ones and $2 per dozen is the top price. The varieties to bring this price were Estelle, which is very fine this year, and Omega, a first-class yellow, which holds up well and appears to be a very good sort for early. There are hundreds of Bergmann at $6 to $12.50 per 100. The coming week will see mums in great abundance and from present prospects there will be a very good market for them.

Carnations are just a trifle more plentiful and quality is good; $3 is obtained for the best, with $1 the lowest figure. Beauties are scarce. This is especially true of long-stemmed ones. Some very good Kaiserin are seen and a few first-class Brides and Maids, but outside of that the majority of the stock is medium and short-stemmed. Outdoor stock is about over. Lilies and valley are not very plentiful and sell well. Violets can be had at your own figures.

Club Meeting.

The monthly meeting of the Florists' Society was held Saturday evening and, while the attendance was not large, a very pleasant time was passed. The principal business was the adoption of a schedule for our flower shows. The first one will be a chrysanthemum show in the club rooms on Saturday afternoon and evening, November 12. Prizes are offered as follows: Best vase white mums, twelve blooms to vase, first, $6; second, $4; third, $3. Pink and yellow, same, each. Best vase twenty-five Bonnaffon, first, $10; second, $8; third, $6. Best general display, $10. Our mum shows in the past have always been very successful and a fine exhibition is looked forward to. All florists and private gardeners are invited to take part. All persons not members of the society or subscribers to the exhibition fund must pay $1 at each show for privilege of entry for prizes.

An invitation was read from the E. G. Hill Co., of Richmond, Ind., for the florists of this city to visit that firm's large plant the latter part of this month. It was accepted with thanks and a committee consisting of J. W. Rodgers and C. J. Ohmer was appointed to look after the details. The date of the trip will be announced next week.

Various Notes.

E. G. Hill was in the city Saturday and brought with him some blooms of his new white early mum, Clementine Touset, to be passed upon by the Chrysanthemum Society committee of this city. The variety was a great surprise to all who saw it, being so far ahead of all other early varieties we have ever seen. It might be described as an early Chadwick, as it greatly resembles this variety. The color is white with a faint cream tint in the center till fully developed. It ranks in size with the largest, and form, foliage and stem are first-class. Altogether it will make a commercial variety of the first order. Mr. Hill said it was a medium grower, very easily managed and was ready to cut from October 8 to 12.

George Murphy has just completed a new set of piping for his greenhouses. He wants to be sure of the required temperature during the coming winter. He has a large bench of Estelle mums which will be ready to cut soon. There are five to seven blooms to a plant and are a fine sight, as they made a very even growth.

Fred Gear had the Smith-Kasson opening, supplying over 10,000 roses, besides many plants.

W. K. Partridge opened his Fourth street store Saturday. An orchestra entertained the large crowd and the ladies received floral souvenirs. The store is modern in every detail and was beautifully decorated for the opening. The large show windows offered a liberal opportunity for tasty dressing, which was taken advantage of. Mr. Partridge deserves the best of success for his enterprise and has the good wishes of the trade.

William Murphy spent a few days last week visiting some of the florists of Indiana.

Thomas Windram and wife are at present busily engaged viewing the good things at the Fair. C. J. Ohmer.

ORANGE, N. J.

The tenth anniversary of the foundations of the New Jersey Floricultural Society was observed in an appropriate manner on October 7. Short addresses were made by the charter members present and by Arthur Herrington and Chas. H. Totty, among the visitors. The floral and vegetables exhibits were choice and filled the tables in the center of the hall, while the decorations of palms and ferns were from the collections of John Crosby Brown and William Runkle. One specimen adiantum four feet across received 95 points at the hands of the judges.

Interest centered, however, in the rival display of orchids from Henry Graves and William Barr and the Cattleya labiata of Edwin Thomas and Arthur Bodwell were seen side by side. There were also several other interesting displays.

TROUBLE WITH CIRCULATION.

We have six houses running east and west from a central boiler shed, three on each side. The houses are 125 feet long attached and each contains two four-foot benches and three walks. The side walls are eight feet high and the houses are well built. Each house has two flows, all 3-inch except those on the south side of the middle houses, which is 2½-inch. The returns are all 1½-inch, twelve under the benches in each south house, nine under the benches in each of the middle houses, five under the south bench and six on the north wall in each north house. The flows are close to the gutters. The main from the boilers is 6-inch until it passes the north house, 5-inch to the middle house, 4½-inch to the next flow and 3-inch to the last one. The whole system has a fall of one inch to twelve feet. The return at the boilers is a 6-inch and has four feet drop. The expansion tank is over the boilers, where, also, is the highest point in the flow. We use two eight-section cast iron boilers each with grate 40x38 inches and 352 square feet of fire surface. There appears to be a sluggish circulation through the entire system, although all coils heat up alike. Best gate valves with full openings are used. We must have 60 degrees when it is 20 degrees below zero outside. Can you suggest a remedy for the difficulty? H. R.

The system seems to be well arranged and the piping should be ample to maintain the temperature desired with a quick return of the water to the boilers. The only point which occurs to me as a drawback is the length of the flow and returns used. When the flow and return pipes exceed 100 feet in length, hot water on the gravity system is seldom altogether satisfactory. If the expansion tank were to be elevated several feet above the highest point in the heating system it would undoubtedly somewhat hasten the flow of water and would at the same time somewhat increase the temperature of the water as it leaves the boiler by placing the system under a higher pressure. If the boilers are set so as to have a good draft and good fuel is used they should be amply large to provide the desired temperature.

I am inclined to believe that by making the most distant point the highest point in the system, a slightly increased efficiency would be obtained but whether or not the added efficiency would repay the expense of the modification is a question I cannot answer. I am inclined to think it would not.

The one alternative which suggests itself in this connection is that of placing a circulating pump in the returns near the boiler and forcing the water through the system at the desired rate, depending upon the outside temperature.

Seed Trade News.

VISITED NEW YORK.—Wm. Rennie, of Rennie & Pino, Providence, R. I.

EVERETT B. CLARK, Milford, Conn., is visiting at Omaha, Neb., and calling on the trade in the west.

THE previous record for a late harvest of onion sets has been beaten by a Chicago grower who started in to finish up his last ten-acre patch October 10.

AT CHICAGO onion set orders for after January delivery are being booked now at $2.25 for red and yellow and $2.50 for white, for a thirty-two-pound bushel.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—Last week Huntington & Page gave a clam bake to the employes of their onion set farms, in celebration of the end of a harvest that had been unusually prolonged.

EUROPEAN aster seed crops have suffered severely all season but the aster has been taken up by many widely scattered growers, so that adequate supplies for the normal requirements are expected.

J. M. THORBURN & Co., New York, will this fall distribute a new potato, Noroton Beauty, said to be sixteen days earlier than Early Rose and a heavy producer. They regard this as their most important introduction in this line.

VISITED CHICAGO.—J. Simmers and Mrs. Simmers, of Toronto, Can., return from the St. Louis exposition; J. G. Purvis, representing Wm. Rennie, Toronto, on his way to Winnipeg, Manitoba, to open a branch distributing house at that point.

VERY discouraging reports are being received from the bean growing sections. The damp weather will not permit of threshing, and it is feared that a continuation of it will mold the beans in the stacks and spoil a large proportion of them.

THE directors of the Wholesale Seedsmen's League held the regular October meeting at New York last Friday. Various matters of trade interest were discussed and crop conditions canvassed. It is yet too early to fix prices on more than a few articles.

RELIABLE estimates of the probable harvest of sweet corn and cucumber seed are not likely to be had for some time to come. The fact that there has been plenty of corn fit for canning purposes and practically more than enough pickles for the salting vats does not insure either a good crop of corn seed nor any sort of a crop of cucumber seed.

CONTINENTAL Europe has suffered a visitation of vermin which has done much damage to all crops this season.

PHILIPPE DE VILMORIN, who has been serving on the international jury of awards at St. Louis, has returned to Paris.

THE government estimate of the year's corn crop is 2,315,000,000 bushels, a loss of 19,000,000 bushels from the September estimate.

QUEDLINBURG growers had an average crop of spinach, but demand has been active, so that stocks are largely distributed and prices strong.

CHICAGO ONION SET CROP.

The onion set crop at Chicago, now that the harvest is completed, pans out about sixty per cent of what the seed sown was expected to produce. The season began wrong, bad spring weather put the ground in poor shape for seeding and the cold weather that prevailed throughout the growing period kept the crop back. On sandy ground, where naturally crops mature early, the effect of the unseasonable weather was not so noticeable and the seed sown in this sort of land pushed along and made a fairly satisfactory crop of sets. The greater portion of the seed planted for sets, however, went into clay soil, where good growing weather is needed during June and the first half of July to mature a good crop of sets. This year unseasonable weather strung along throughout June and July, with rains at the wrong time, giving a second growth to at least a third of the crop, thereby lessening it just that much. The "evergreen" onion field is something that no onion grower likes. It makes the harvest more costly, shortens the crop and hurts the quality. A few of the Chicago growers experienced it this year, as did growers at other points. With a short set crop at Chicago and the dropping out of growers at points that formerly cut a figure as onion set sections, there is not likely to be any recession from prices now ruling.

MAILING CATALOGUES.

Apropos of an item in the REVIEW of October 6 I beg to say that we have not found the new postoffice regulations in regard to mailing catalogues in bulk unreasonable except in one particular; that we secured permit No. 2, having made application in July; that we have had the electrotype made, have placed an order with the paper bag manufacturers, who have the electro ere this and probably have it on the press. The Cleveland postoffice received advices on October 3 and we received our permit October 8. That hardly seems as though the obstacles were insurmountable.

It is reasonable that the certain words should be printed on the wrappers and that they should come within certain limitations as to size, the letters between 10-point and 24-point and the figure between 14-point and 36-point. It is reasonable also that the number at a time, 2,000 at least, should be prescribed.

It does seem unreasonable, however, that mail to Canada and Mexico must be sent in the usual way, and it will certainly add labor to have catalogues presented at the postoffice in packages of equal number that can be easily counted, but the American Seed Trade Association only asked that these regulations apply to third-class matter and they apply to fourth-class as well.

We believe that when the new order is understood everyone will realize that we have gained a long step toward second-class classification of catalogues and one or two other desirable things along these lines. C. E. KENDEL, Sec'y.

MUSHROOMS.

Mushrooms are by no means fastidious regarding the style or construction of the house nor the location in which they are grown. We have seen them grown successfully under greenhouse benches, in an empty corner of a coal cellar, in a root cellar and even in a disused ice house with just as little trouble as in an up-to-date mushroom house. In any or all of these situations the proper conditions for their development may be provided. These conditions comprise darkness, a moist atmosphere, a temperature of not less than 50 degrees and some means of ventilation when necessary.

It is, however, important that the situation be such that the fluctuations of the outdoor temperature will have little if any effect on the temperature inside the house. In this respect a frost-proof cellar is about as good as anything. While the temperature may be maintained by fire heat, if hard firing has to be resorted to, the drying influence on the beds is detrimental to the development of the crop and may necessitate the application of water to the beds, which should, if possible, be avoided. If conditions are provided so that the natural moisture of the bed can be maintained, that will be sufficient for the best development of the crop. Where it is intended to go into mushroom culture to any extent it will pay, however, to have a properly constructed house and in the making of such the above points should be taken into consideration.

Regarding the preparation of the material for making up the bed, in my notes of last year I tried to cover the matter pretty fully, and it seems like going over the same ground again, but for the benefit of beginners or others who may be looking for information on this point I will here give my ideas briefly. Instead of procuring fresh manure and keeping it turned frequently for eight or ten days until the heat is pretty well worked out, the custom now is to mix the fresh manure with soil or old rotted manure, or both, about one-half fresh manure and the other half old manure and soil in proportions of about two-thirds old manure to one of soil. After the first mushroom beds are past bearing the old material can be conveniently used for mixing with the fresh manure. But if soil has been employed in the first mixture, the additional soil used for covering the bed should be partly removed before the bed is disturbed to avoid getting too much soil in the mixture, which would render it too heavy. The great advantage of mixing the fresh manure with what might be called cooling material is that violent heating is avoided and a large percentage of the ammonia retained.

The best depth of bed is twelve inches. A bed of this depth is less liable to dry out and will continue to bear longer than one of eight or nine inches, which depth is sometimes recommended as best. In making the bed the material should be packed firmly and before the spawn is introduced the temperature of the bed (which will probably rise to over 100 degrees) should be allowed to fall to about 90 degrees. It is very important that the spawn be fresh to insure its running freely. Pieces about two inches square should be inserted in holes about three inches deep and five inches apart, the holes being again filled up to the level of the bed. In a week or ten days, when the temperature of the bed has fallen to about 75 degrees, the bed should be covered with soil to a depth of about two inches. This soil should be beaten down with the back of a spade so as to present a level surface, but not beaten too hard, especially if rather damp. After this covering the bed may rise in temperature, but after it has again dropped below 75 degrees a covering of clean straw should be given to help conserve both heat and moisture.

For the first week or ten days the temperature should be kept in the neighborhood of 70 degrees to insure the free diffusion of the spawn, but after that it should gradually recede until, when it comes into bearing, it should be only slightly above that of the atmosphere of the house. The best temperature for the house to be kept is not under 50 or above 55 degrees. If run much higher the quality of the product is apt to be poor. After the mushrooms begin to appear, which, under suitable conditions, should be in from six to seven weeks, the straw should be removed from the beds. This removal is necessary not only to allow freedom to gather the crop but also to avert damping off, which sometimes takes place if the surface of the bed is kept too damp. The length of time that the bed will continue to bear varies according to the quality or moisture conserving properties of the material used. But where a continuous supply is desired fresh beds should be made up at intervals of about three weeks. After the first crop is over, by giving a good watering with tepid water and covering over with an inch of fresh soil, a good second crop can often be had, but as this cannot be relied upon, where fresh material can conveniently be procured, it is better to make up a fresh bed rather than depend upon procuring a second crop from the old one.

CUCUMBERS UNDER GLASS.

An excellent treatise on this subject is published by Mr. Fabius, Redlands Nursery, Emsworth, Hants. To be a successful cucumber grower, says the author, all depends upon the man; no amount of advice, instruction, or assistance can be of any use in the absence of that one condition. The publication of this little book might therefore seem superfluous; but it is really far from being so, and the most severely practical man will derive many a hint from these pages. The whole routine of cultivation, from the sowing of the seed to the cutting of the fruit, is clearly expounded, and the questions relating to soil, heating, and other essentials are fully entered into. Hygiene and preventive measures are most important in cucumber growing, for if the soil contains eel-worms, or fungous spores are introduced with manure, the cultural conditions which suit the cucumber also favor the fungi. The soil should be sterilized by steam if possible; if not, by stacking the loam in layers with gas-lime intervening, and keeping it at least twelve months before using it. The close, stuffy atmosphere of a cucumber house is most favorable for the growth of fungous molds of all kinds; the importance of free ventilation is thus emphasized. Overcrowding the plants of course favors the spread of the fungus. The maintenance of an even temperature is also of primary importance, and the watering should be most carefully attended to. Think first, and water afterwards, is Mr. Fabius' advice, and excellent it is. Indeed, we have rarely seen a book in which science (that is, knowledge derived from careful observation) has been more judiciously applied to practice. If all "book-knowledge" were of this kind, we should not hear much about the uselessness of book-learning.—Gardeners' Chronicle.

FROM OUR ENGLISH EXCHANGES.

The Gardeners' Magazine.

The high position to which horticulture has attained could not have been better attested than by the recent opening by the King and Queen of the new hall of the Royal Horticultural Society and the character of the assemblage which was privileged to witness it. After many vicissitudes the germ of that society, originating in the brain of its founder a century ago, has developed into a magnificent organization universally recognized as fully competent to deal with the varied phases and interests of horticulture as in the process of evolution they present themselves.

Every now and then some correspondent sends us specimens of gloxinias with a double bloom, a supplementary corolla emerging from the outer surface of the first. The condition is figured in Vegetable Teratology, page 451, and at the time of the publication of that volume the condition was so "fixed" that a "strain" of such flowers was produced and was offered in commerce. Since that time the strain has died out, save for the occasional occurrence of specimens such as we have alluded to. Messrs. Parsons, of Swansea, now send us pure white flowers of this character, which they tell us are reproduced from seed, and come very true and regular. No doubt by continued selection improvements will be effected.

Fort Smith, Ark.—The second annual flower show by the lady managers of Belle Point hospital will be held November 3 to 5, with A. A. Pantet manager. Last year's show was a great success and a liberal premium list has been issued.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., E. W. Kirkpatrick, McKinney, Tex.; Vice-Pres., C. L. Watrous, Des Moines; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 29th annual convention will be held at West Baden, Ind., June, 1905.

R. O. Graham is treasurer and manager of the Lilly Orchard Co., east of Bloomington, Ill.

Field-grown plants of Crimson Rambler rose are in active demand this fall and in short supply.

The Champaign Nursery Co., Champaign, Ill., has opened a sales ground in town for the fall season.

The P. J. Berckmans Co. says the Amoor river privet, Ligustrum Amurense, so largely planted for hedges in the south, has stood 20 degrees below zero.

There will be large plantings of June budded peach trees in the south again this fall.

Thomas J. Dwyer, Cornwall, N. Y., died October 4 of Bright's disease. He was 49 years of age and had spent his lifetime in the nursery business, his name being particularly associated with strawberries and small fruits.

The southern strawberry growers are buying very large quantities of plants of southeastern nurserymen. Plants set out after the fall rains will give a fair crop the next spring, but the real harvest comes the second season. Most growers plow up and replant half their field each year.

Apple orcharding is on the increase in the south, but northern winter varieties do not hold their fruit well. The Berckmans Co. recommends Hargrave, a fall variety which originated in North Carolina, and Poorhouse, a winter apple supposed to keep market growers away from the place of that name.

Orcharding in the Pacific northwest, and consequently the nursery business, should be largely stimulated by the new rate on apples put in effect October 8 on the Northern Pacific. It is 60 cents per hundred pounds with a 3,000-pound minimum, as against a former rate of 75 cents and a 24,000-pound minimum. This is to permit second-grade as well as first grade fruit to reach eastern markets.

PITCHER & MANDA AGAIN.

James R. Pitcher, manager at No. 46 Cedar street, New York, has filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities $69,450 and no assets. Of the liabilities $12,237 are for goods sold to the firm of Pitcher & Martin, soap manufacturers, in 1897. Part of his debts were contracted in New York and part at Short Hills, N. J., and various other suburban places between 1892 and 1898. Mr. Pitcher was for twelve years manager of a mutual accident association, afterward was interested in the nursery business of Pitcher & Manda at Short Hills, and later was president of a soap manufacturing concern in New York.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

Trade the past week has been exceptionally good for this season; stock of all kinds has shown an improvement. Roses are better in color and are beginning to get the usual size and length of stem. Carnations are not very plentiful, but chrysanthemums are becoming more plentiful every day, so that they will not be needed so badly, although since asters ran out the shortage was greatly felt.

J. B. Murdoch & Co., the new wholesale house, have opened their new store room, 545 Liberty Avenue, second floor, and are now ready for business.

Club Meeting.

The Florists' Club met last Tuesday evening. The subject for discussion was "Dahlias and Other Seasonable Flowers." R. Vincent, Jr., & Sons, White Marsh, Md., showed a lot of dahlias, some of which were very fine and received a great deal of praise from the members present. Mr. Zimmerman, the gardener at Dixmont, showed a number of things which he grows in quantity, such as gaillardias, dahlias, cosmos, mignonette, small hardy sunflowers and hardy asters. He explained that all of these are used to brighten the rooms of the lunatics, which was news to many, who thought the only thing they got was strait-jackets.

Julius Ludwig brought a bunch of native gentian, or closed gentian, which many present had never seen. The Pittsburg Cut Flower Co. showed some fine vases of early chrysanthemums, grown by the Pittsburg Rose and Carnation Co. All of these things came in for discussion and a very pleasant and profitable evening was spent, after which President Falconer called on John Bader to give us an account of his trip to California, and then we found out why John was so quiet while we were discussing dahlias. He said the ones we had were nothing, as he had seen some in California six times as large as the largest we had, which would make them about thirty inches in diameter. Pretty fair sized dahlias!

Various Notes.

The Pittsburg Rose and Carnation Co., last week brought in its second gas well within a month. This well will be plugged for the present and Fred Burki will not lose any sleep for some time worrying about fuel, and he need not care how high coal goes, as they now have four flowing wells, two of which will be held in reserve, possibly not needed for a year or two. Just think of that, you eastern brothers!

Mrs. E. A. Williams made a trip east and purchased an immense stock of large palms, ferns and other decorative stock to fill up the new houses, as she closed out most of the old stock last spring to make room for rebuilding. Mrs. Williams is the only woman in the business in this city and she is capable of keeping the wisest of them on the jump as far as getting orders for decorations is concerned.

The new store of A. K. Hutchison, in Sewickley, opened last Thursday in a blaze of splendor and trade so far has exceeded all of Mr. Hutchison's anticipations.

T. P. Langhans paid a visit to Washington, D. C., last week on legal business and then ran around by way of Philadelphia.

The People's Store, one of the department houses in Pittsburg, has been making a run on Boston ferns. This is getting to be a fad with all the department stores.

Mrs. Elicker, of Homestead, Pa., has been offering her place for sale. It would be a great chance for anyone with the cash.

Walter Breitenstein, George and Ed. Blind are reported as St. Louis visitors.

NEWPORT, R. I.

Always at this season we have a period of quiet trade, for with us it is between times, so to speak. The summer business is on its last legs, and the regular autumn and winter trade has hardly begun. There is always the funeral work coming along regularly, and it is really the mainstay of the flower trade here. Prices are perhaps a little less stiff, for as the customers thin out we are all anxious to lose no one. The first violets of the season appeared this week.

The regular meeting of the Horticultural Society took place last Wednesday evening, with President James J. Sullivan in the chair. While all the reports of the recent annual exhibition are not in, enough is known to assure a most pronounced success financially. A. J. Pow exhibited Nerine Fothergilli major and received a silver medal. Colin Robertson showed his new seedling dahlia and got a silver medal. M. B. Faxon displayed a collection of assorted dahlias which received honorable mention. It was by far the best meeting held in a long time and much enjoyed by all present.

Leikens will open a very pretty winter store October 15 at 7 East Thirty-third street, New York City. Although this past summer has been Mr. Leikens' first season he has had a most successful one, and that his New York venture will be a success we feel assured.

Siebrecht & Son closed their summer store here last Saturday, having shipped previously all the palms and other plants remaining on hand to their nurseries at New Rochelle, N. Y. Mr. Armstrong, the manager, has returned to the New York store after a most successful season.

Dennis Leary, of J. M. Hodgson's, very prettily decorated the State Armory for the annual firemen's ball last Thursday evening.

Hitchings & Co. have finished the greenhouse at Sandy Point Farm, for Reginald C. Vanderbilt.

The dahlias here look much better now than they have any time this summer. The frosts still keep off, although we have had some cold nights, the glass showing as low as 36 degrees. Dahlias are the "hobby" here now. ZERO.

ROCHESTER, IND.—J. H. Shelton has had a great deal of funeral work lately. One of the finest floral pieces ever seen here was a forty-eight inch broken wheel made for the funeral of Valentine Zimmerman.

LILIUM LONGIFLORUM.

The first bulbs of the season of L. longiflorum arrived in San Francisco the last week in September. The importers have been very anxious to dispose of them at $28 per thousand. Some of the growers who purchased heavily of these early imported bulbs during the last two seasons have been very slow this year to place their orders. The bulbs have not by any means come up to expectations and unless the coming season shows a larger percentage of sound flowering shoots the importers will have to look to other fields in which to dispose of their goods. The main trouble lies with the growers themselves. Knowing that the longiflorum does not force as easily or quickly as does L. Harrisii, they have been in a great hurry to get the bulbs planted and by their constant requests for early stock the Japanese growers have got into the habit of digging and shipping unripe bulbs to fill the demand. I think this trouble will right itself in a season or two and growers will become content to wait until the bulbs are in proper condition to handle.

Although the longiflorum does not force as easily as does the other variety, it is much hardier and will stand much more neglect. In planting now for Easter flowering there is no necessity for bringing the bulbs into the heat until early in the winter. They are easily handled in flats, planting about ten bulbs in a box about twelve inches wide, twenty inches long and five inches deep. In pots I force them in 6-inch and 7-inch sizes. I had a batch in boxes about three weeks before Easter last year and I undertook to transplant them into pots for retailing for church decoration. I found they could be handled all right provided they were placed on the floor of the greenhouse and watered and shaded heavily for about a week. In fact, it was impossible to tell the difference from the foliage as to whether they had grown in the pots or whether they were recently transplanted in them. I found this a good plan where the bulbs had flowered unevenly, as they often do, even in pots, and it is no trouble to get twice the price for an Easter lily in a pot that you obtain for the cut stem. G.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

The weather has turned cooler again. Business is only fair, very little doing except funeral work. For the first time in a month we are able to show a fair supply of flowers. Chrysanthemums are coming in large quantities. Carnations are daily more plentiful, a good many cut from young plants recently housed. Stems are short on such flowers, although blooms are good. Such varieties as Lawson, Enchantress, Estelle and Prosperity are selling at 40 cents per dozen. Flora Hill, Crocker, Schwerin and Triumph sell at three dozen for a dollar. There are quantities of short-stemmed Brides and Maids that do not bring more than $1.50 per hundred. There is a good demand for long-stemmed roses and few are to be seen. American Beauties fare about the worst of any, the flowers being very flat and stubby. This is caused by the heat of several weeks ago. The chrysanthemum is the florists' friend at this time of the year, and there is nothing at any season that can compare with it as a general utility flower. We are paying the growers from 15 cents to 35 cents a dozen for outdoor blooms and they retail readily at three times those prices. The inside mums are selling at from $1 to $2 per dozen. The early indoor blooms proved remunerative enough to the growers of mums and the extra late will sell well after the outside blooms are gone.

Various Notes.

Clarke Bros., of Portland, Ore., and Fruitvale, Cal., are erecting another large greenhouse at the latter place.

John Campiano has purchased the interest of his partner, N. Rolleri, in the Oakland Floral Company.

W. W. Hoogs, father of William Hoogs, of Sanborn's Floral Depot, Oakland, was buried last Saturday. Mr. Hoogs has the sympathies of his many friends in the craft.

MILWAUKEE.

At last week's meeting of the Florists' Club, a florists' bowling team was organized and the committees in charge will arrange for regular meetings and social sessions during the winter months. Papers will be read on various topics at each meeting of the Florists' Club hereafter and discussions will be held on subjects of interest to the trade.

Most growers have finished benching their carnations and the stock in general has done well in the field this summer. There will be a slight increase in stock over last season.

Frost and heavy rains have cut off all outdoor stock and demand is brisk now for all other lines. Trade in general has been good the past week. Mums and violets are in, the former selling well.

Seldom has a more magnificent display of flowers been seen than was seen at the funeral of Postmaster General H. C. Payne. Floral tributes from personal friends, business associates and other organizations were sent in from all over the country. The flowers which came from Washington with the body almost filled the car and they arrived in good condition. They were masterpieces of the florists' art. Among the most notable pieces were a wreath of orchids and valley sent by the President and his wife, a large wreath and mail pouch, a large wreath with large floral envelope bearing the inscription "His Last Letter," a lamp post with mail box attached, a street car sent by the Street Railway Co., an immense basket of American Beauties, also many pieces from civic organizations and newspaper associates. It took several wagons to convey the flowers to the cemetery. Incog.

The Holton & Hunkel greenhouses at 1200 Humboldt avenue were damaged by fire to the extent of $3,000 October 8. About 4:30 a. m. C. B. Whitnall, former owner of the greenhouses and who lives directly in front of them, discovered the fire and turned in an alarm. The flames had started in the boiler room, from which both old and new greenhouses extend toward the east and the west. In this center also are the barn and the work sheds, all of which were destroyed. The ends of the glass houses nearest the fire were also burned off and the stock damaged. The company has 25,000 square feet of glass, a quarter of which, it is estimated, was broken by fire and water. The buildings are insured but not the implements and tools. They had just received a consignment of palms from Holland, the duty and freight on which amounted to $1,000.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

On the day that Charles Chadwick opened his new retail store at Fulton and La Grave streets he gave each visitor a rose or carnation. J. A. Creelman is the manager and is well known in the town. The attendance at the opening was large. The new store is handsomely fitted up. The greenhouse plant consists of twenty-six houses and the stock is looking good. Carnations and violets have been the special crops in the past but roses, particularly Beauties, will be grown in the future.

Allentown, Pa.—Geo. S. Peters will go into business, building two greenhouses at 706 N. Eighth street.

Jacob F. Marshall has arranged for the construction of nearly 30,000 square feet of greenhouses on the river bottoms east of Main street and north of State. The greenhouses will be among the largest in the west and will be devoted almost exclusively to forcing vegetables. The houses now used for this purpose will be put into good condition for use for plants and cut flowers, both branches of Mr. Marshall's business requiring additional supplies.

TO WORLD'S FAIR VISITORS.

Certain other Chicago-St. Louis lines have advertised freely in Chicago and elsewhere that they land their passengers at the World's Fair grounds. Up to a short time ago they were using the Rock Island road to reach the Fair Grounds. A recent order of the United States court prohibits the Rock Island from handling the trains of other lines. The Wabash is, therefore, the only line that can handle World's Fair travel between Union Station, Page Avenue and the World's Fair grounds. The Chicago-St. Louis lines referred to have applied for permission to run their passengers over the Wabash tracks, which permission has been refused. They will be obliged to land their passengers at Union Station, which is over five miles from the World's Fair grounds.

All Wabash Trains

to and from St. Louis, both regular and special, pass and stop at the World's Fair main entrance, where the Wabash has its own magnificent passenger station, with every facility for rapid handling of passengers and baggage.

Between Chicago and St. Louis the Wabash has

leaving Chicago at 8:45 a. m., 11:03 a. m., 9:17 p. m. and 11:30 p. m. The 11:03 a. m. train is the BANNER BLUE LIMITED, "the latest and only finest day train on earth." This train makes the run from Chicago to St. Louis in seven hours, reducing the usual running time by one hour.

World's Fair Excursion Rates

from Chicago are: For coach tickets (good only in coaches or free reclining chair cars) with return limit of seven days from date of sale, $6.00. These tickets are on sale every day except Friday and Saturday.

Ten-day tickets, good in coaches, chair cars and sleepers, $8.00. Sold only on October 12, 16 and 17.

Sixty-day tickets, good in coaches, chair cars or sleepers, $10.00. Sold every day.

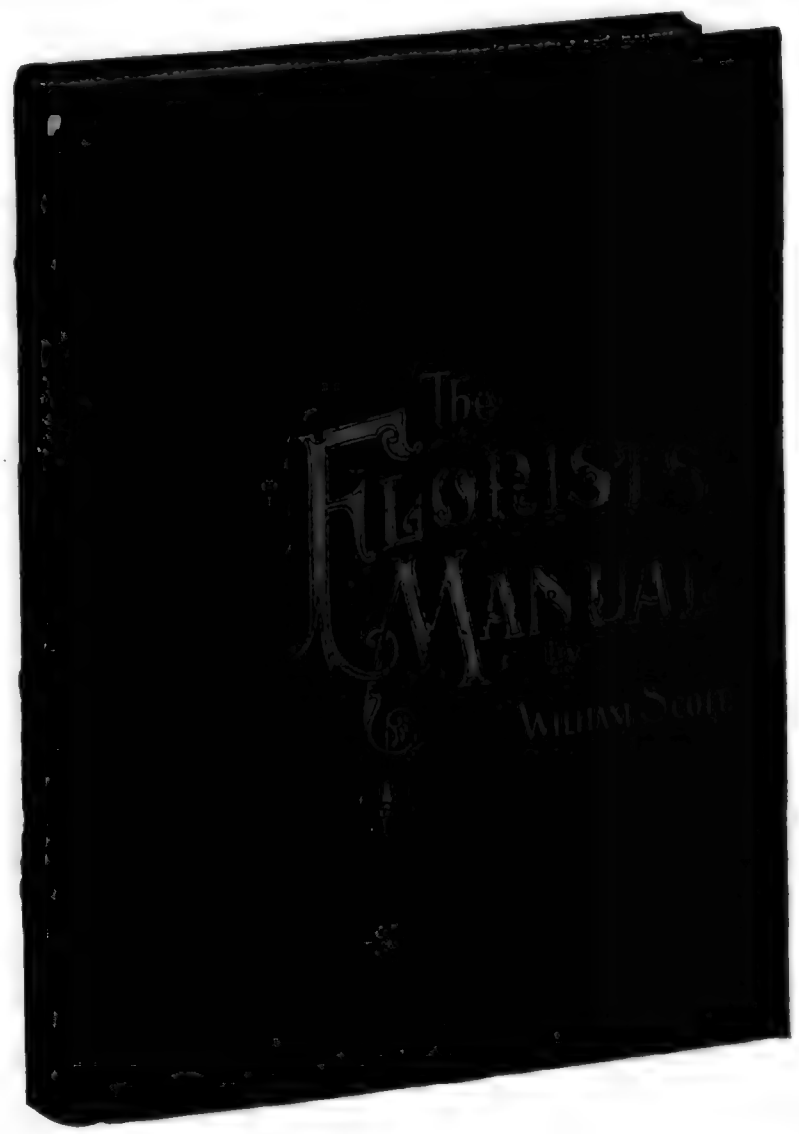
PRUNING CLIMBING ROSES.

What are known as climbing roses, of which Crimson Rambler is perhaps the best known variety, should now receive attention in pruning (August 6). I know it is the accepted plan to defer the pruning of roses generally until March and April. Those who are thoroughly conversant with the needs and ways of climbing roses, know well that they are not like hybrid perpetuals or teas; they do not produce the bulk of their flowers upon growth of the current season, but from that which is made the previous one. This type of rose, then, comes under the head of plants requiring maturity of growth if a full crop is to be expected. How, then, is maturity of growth obtained? Not by the overcrowding of shoots, but by due exposure of growth to air and sunlight.

To obtain these results it does seem to be the most common-sense principle to remove the cause of want of maturity at the proper time, and that is directly the plants have given their crop of blossom. Why wait until March when the same thing can be done at once? Knowing so well that so many persons do not realize the requirements of this section—and a powerful one it is in the rose garden—I lay special emphasis upon this detail—its necessity, and the results accruing from it.

Taking the climbing or rambling varieties of roses generally, of which Euphrosyne, Electra and Leuchtstern are good examples, in addition to the old favorite named above, the finest trusses of flower are produced from the strong sucker-like growths made during the season of flowering. In many instances where the culture is of the best, these shoots reach a length of ten feet in one season. These are the growths to retain for next season's flower crop. In pruning, therefore, due attention should be given to removing weakly growths that have flowered this year, cutting them clean away from the base. Where a strong shoot of last year's growth has given a full crop of flower this, and there is space for it to remain, do not cut such away, but prune away all flower trusses back to a growth eye. Lay in all the sucker-like shoots, not overcrowding them, and do not top them, no matter how long they may be at present, as with a damp autumn some of the eyes near the apex might push into growth, and that is not desirable.



After pruning, prick up the soil about the plants, adding a little half-decayed farmyard manure if the growth is not satisfactory, and water copiously in dry weather. If the garden hose is used vigorously to moisten the foliage in the evening after a hot day, so much the better for the growth, as it washes off dust and insects, and in every way encourages freedom of growth.—E. MOLYNEUX, in Gardeners' Magazine.

PENTSTEMONS.

I must differ from anyone who deprecates raising pentstemons from seeds as compared with propagating by cuttings, says a writer in the Gardeners' Magazine. If you have named varieties, of course propagation by cuttings is absolutely indispensable to maintain the variety. That is, of course, one thing. But the raising of pentstemons from seed is so very much another thing, not only because all trouble of propagating by cuttings and wintering them securely is saved, but there is from seedlings the certainty of securing great variety in colors of flowers, and that is a great gain. So far as the securing of size and quality of flower is concerned, I have always found, and my experience extended over many years and to thousands of plants, that seed saved from a good stock will reproduce all the best qualities of that stock, with the advantage that greater variety of color results also. I have found few hardy plants, such as the pentstemon may be regarded, that reproduces high-class quality so well.

It is so easy to sow seed in a cold house or frame in February or March, doing so in a shallow pan, to obtain plenty of strong plants to dibble into the open ground at the end of May, and then have them to bloom profusely through the autumn. Shortened back in the winter, and induced to break low down, they will the following summer make large and most attractive plants, carrying bloom until the early spring sowing comes in. To myriads of flower lovers such a method of dealing with the pentstemon is a great gain.

While one of the worst of flowers to travel well in a cut state, generally being so shown at a disadvantage, it is in the garden one of the most charming, and will give, apart from external color and size of flower, very beautiful inner markings. After all, to myriads who devote attention to gardening, plants that can be easily raised have much more value than have choice-named or florists' varieties.

GINSENG.

Can some reader of the REVIEW give me information about ginseng? What is it used for and what is the culture?

R. V.

The ginseng of commerce is Panax quinquefolium of botany. The name panax would indicate that it is for its curative properties that it is valued and as a matter of fact by some it is regarded as the panacea for all ills that human flesh is heir to. It is not largely used in America except as a demulcent. In China, however, it is regarded as having properties which could only be attributed to it by superstition. The large sale for the roots in that country has led to the exportation of the American root until the plant in a wild state is now seldom met with. It is cultivated, but a large majority of those who undertake the industry meet with failure because of ignorance of the plant's many peculiarities. It may be propagated from seeds, germinating the first or second year, according to whether they are fresh or dry. The soil must be light, rich and well drained.

Because of the high price at which ginseng roots have sold it has been made the means of swindling a large number of credulous persons, and glowing descriptions of the profits to be made by purchasing from any of the numerous ginseng companies are to be taken with a very large grain of allowance. For further information on this plant and its culture write to the Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., for bulletin No. 16 of the Division of Botany.

SURELY this cannot be true; well, we have over 100 growers who have written us, a large majority without request, their opinions; we publish a few of these letters in the columns of this paper; see on pages 1033-34-36-37-46, what they say about the FUMIGATING KIND TOBACCO POWDER. All began with a five-pound trial bag at our expense, which gave them an opportunity without cost to prove its GOODNESS and our assertion that it was the most effective, cleanest and quickest, as well as cheapest (10 cents per 100-foot house) article to fumigate with, and that all kinds of aphis can be killed in one night. Let us send you a five-pound trial bag by express, it will cost you nothing but the express charges on it, and be convinced that what your brother growers say of it is true. Our booklet tells of it; we mail it on request.

RETURNING CONDENSATION.

We are heating our five greenhouses, each 200 feet long, by steam pipes as follows: Three houses with a 2½-inch supply and ten 1-inch returns. Two houses with ten 1¼-inch pipes but no overhead supply pipe, the 1¼-inch pipes taking steam from the boiler and running under the benches to the farther end of the houses and condensation returning to the boiler through a 2½-inch pipe. We have, in other words, 600 feet of 2½-inch feed pipe, 6,000 feet of 1-inch pipe, 4,000 feet of 1¼-inch pipe and 200 feet of 2½-inch drip or return pipe. We desire to ascertain the maximum condensation when the boilers are working their best, say during a night when the temperature is 20 degrees below zero and every pipe carrying steam. We are anxious to determine the kind and number of pumps to return this condensation to the boilers and should have figures for the maximum condensation per hour. H. H. N.

Under normal conditions, with a house temperature of 60 degrees, the pipe mentioned should give about 170 gallons of water per hour. The pump needed will therefore be one of comparatively small size. If the pump is to be worked by the boiler pressure on the heating boilers it will be necessary to secure a pump with a large steam cylinder and a small pump cylinder in order that sufficient power may be secured to force a small jet of water into the boilers against the boiler or working pressure. There are, however, pumps made to meet this condition and pump makers can give you a pump of the proper dimensions if they know boiler pressure, quantity of water to be elevated and the distance it has to be lifted. There are also automatic return traps which are used satisfactorily for this purpose in many greenhouse establishments.

EXHIBITION FLOWERS.

The weather just now, while ideal in many respects for the development of the flowers, is really too bright and warm during the day, and shading is still necessary. So far we have been free from those warm, foggy nights, which cause the flowers to damp so terribly, and it is to be hoped that this year we may be spared this misfortune. The burn by the sun is entirely different to the damping from the moist night air, but the results are equally destructive. Nothing is so heartrending to the exhibition grower as to walk in his house some morning and find his choicest flowers spoiled and worthless. Every day the flowers are opening and from now on the exhibition grower lives in a little world of his own. The rose or carnation grower, or any other specialist, is naturally interested in his work, but he can never experience the pleasure that the exhibition mum grower feels as he daily watches the culmination of his hopes after weeks of watching and waiting. Chrysanthemumitis is a disease that spreads rapidly at this season. While it is contagious, it is not fatal and runs its course in some four or five weeks, after which the patient is able to sit up and take notice and gradually recovers his sanity. This disease, like hay fever, once contracted recurs every year about the same time, and is only cured by the death of the patient or the refusal of the boss to buy any more novelties.

To return to our flowers, we can now begin to see how the novelties are shaping, and while some are comparatively useless for our climate, others will be very fine. Of the Wells set, Winnie Terry may be set down as useless. It is deficient in petalage and shows no merit whatever. This merely emphasizes the fact that no matter how good a variety may be in Europe, it does not follow that it is any good here.

On the other hand, J. H. Doyle and Mrs. J. A. Miller are both finishing up enormous flowers. They will be invaluable to the exhibitor and, while they run somewhat on the same color, a terra cotta, shading to brick red, they are both indispensable.

Mrs. W. Duckham is a lovely thing. It greatly resembles Cheltoni in shape and general appearance, but it is deeper in color and a narrow crimson line running down each side of the petal makes it a striking and distinct variety. It is equally as graceful as Cheltoni and must become a very popular variety.

With the exception of Merstham Yellow, which has already been spoken of in these notes, none of the others of the Wells set is developed enough to judge yet, but Dora Stevens looks to me like a greatly improved Chenon de Leche.

Mrs. J. Dunn, as a white, will hardly come up to our standard for size. The flower has lots of petalage, but the florets fall close to the stem and, unless exhibited on a board, the size of the flower is lost to a large extent. Emily Mileham, a white, somewhat on the same lines, I regard as a much finer kind and this latter will probably make its way all right.

Last year's novelties are showing up in wonderful shape. W. Duckham, while it is later in developing, shows up as fine as last year and if this variety is not set up in splendid shape everywhere I shall be greatly surprised.

Cheltoni is a peerless yellow, in its season, which is second early. I saw a batch of several hundreds October 17 that were simply exquisite. Immense in size, yet with a perfect finish, one may say it is in a class by itself. The demand for stock of this variety at a popular price will, I predict, be phenomenal.

Harrison Dick and Donald McLeod, the two bronzy yellows, are both ready to cut and I regard them as useful kinds for either the commercial or exhibition grower.

F. A. Cobbold is making such enormous foliage that there is not room for it in the bench, and I think it will have to be grown in a pot, where its exuberance would be tamed down.

Two whites that were not generally distributed last year, Mrs. D. V. West and Guy Hamilton, are both showing up finely and will make their marks this year all right.

Ben Wells, also, will please everybody, unless I am greatly mistaken. Massive, yet finely finished, and a very vigorous habit combine to make this a splendid sort.

In the crimsons Maynell and Wright both look well and, while they both damped some in the sunlight, this trouble has ceased since the plants were well shaded. I shall be surprised if S. T. Wright particularly is not set up in fine shape at Boston. It is making an enormous flower and the color is very striking. Some growers are having trouble with it, but the fact is it will not stand much feeding and, as it is such a strong grower, feeding is not really necessary.

I do not recall ever seeing the flowers of all the kinds finishing up so nicely as they are doing this year and I look for fine exhibitions and good competition, particularly in Boston.

CARE OF STOCK PLANTS.

Now that the early mums are being cut I wish you would tell us how to treat the plants for stock for next season's propagating. I have several new sorts, only a few plants of each, and I want to multiply them as much as possible before another year. Please tell me how to proceed. H. O.

If H. O. wishes to increase his stock very much the best way would be to take all the cuttings that are now showing on the old stools and root them at once. These cuttings, when rooted, can be planted out closely on a bench in a temperature of 50 degrees and they will in spring produce a great abundance of cuttings, after being topped once or twice. The old plants can also be kept in a cool house and they will continue to give cuttings all winter. Brian Boru.

TIME TO CUT MUMS.

At what stage of development should chrysanthemum blooms be cut when long usefulness is desired? E. K.

The flowers should be cut just before they are fully developed. They will then keep much better than if they had been permitted to get too far developed on the plants. The development of a flower can be gauged most easily by a novice by the petals in the center. So long as the center of the flower keeps hard and the petals keep unfolding from it the flower will continue to develop and increase in size. When the center shows signs of "finishing," the flower should be cut and stored away in a dry, cold cellar with little light. By keeping the water fresh and sweet flowers can be kept for two weeks or longer before being used for decorating, exhibiting or whatever the case may be.

Brian Boru.

LEAF SPOT ON OMEGA.

Can you tell me why the foliage on Omega has turned brown? The plants were bought last May from a western firm and were nice, clean stock. They started well and have grown well; they now stand five feet, single stems, but three feet is bare, the foliage having turned brown, as old foliage does. They are in a good, light house, the balance of which is Halliday and Robinson. These are in good shape, standing five feet with foliage to the bench, all planted in five inches of soil and eight inches each way. They have been carefully watered. The soil is rather light and plenty of good manure was mixed in before planting. After they were well started a light top dressing of fine sheep manure and wood ashes was given every ten days, but no manure water. Omega seems to be a fine early mum and I would like to be able to grow it in better shape. H. D.

The plants of Omega are affected with leaf spot. There are several forms of this leaf disease and, while they can be kept in check in the first stages of the disease by the use of Bordeaux mixture or sulphide of potassium, it is now too late to help them much. Some varieties are more susceptible to this disease than others and Omega, in my experience, is one of them. As soon as the flowers are cut the plants intended to be kept for stock should be taken up and boxed and, after being sprayed with Bordeaux, may be removed to another house. This will go far toward having clean stock for next year. Brian Boru.

THE PEOPLE'S FLOWER.

From a bulletin of the Cornell University Experiment Station we learn that the chrysanthemum industry in New York state involves more capital even than the growing of peaches. When the chrysanthemum craze began in America in 1888, there were loud complaints from those florists who thought there would be no great permanent popularity after the first fever was passed. At first, the chrysanthemum seriously infringed for six weeks upon the year-round favorites, the rose, carnation and violet, but it must now be considered one of the four staples of greenhouse floriculture. The times of universally excessive prices are forever past, the readjustment to a final acceptance of this is nearly made, and the chrysanthemum has become distinctly a flower of the people.

The mission of the chrysanthemum is to fill the dull interval between the middle of October and the last of November. Never until the development of the peculiar forcing-house industry, the commercializing of floriculture on a vast scale, was it possible for a flower grown almost exclusively by the florists, and under glass, to win its way into the hearts of the masses. It is the greater general use of cut flowers that makes floriculture unique. The popular demand for long-stemmed flowers, and for some favorites in every month of the year, has conspicuously changed the methods of cultivation of chrysanthemums, roses and violets. Persons buy cut flowers, keep them in vases as long as they are thoroughly satisfactory, and are very sensitive to the delights of arrangement for form and color effects. The keeping qualities of chrysanthemums are extraordinary, and this happy circumstance is one reason why this flower has so won its way into the hearts of the masses. Nevertheless, the cry is sometimes raised that the chrysanthemum is a "rich man's flower."—Gardener's Chronicle.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Cinerarias.

It is not easy to discard these beautiful plants, for they are so showy and the strains now are grand and easily obtainable from any reputable seedsman. Seeds sown in August for Easter plants will now be in 2-inch pots and will soon want a 4-inch, in which they will pass the winter, and in February be shifted into their flowering pot, 5-inch or 6-inch. Remember that the cineraria, while ruined by the slightest frost, will thrive during the winter months at 40 degrees. In fact, the fullest light and a low temperature and constant fumigation are the three essentials to make stout, healthy plants. One thing more, use in potting a rather coarse loam with a fourth of well-rotted manure, so that the water will pass quickly through. In a sandy, fibreless compost that held too much moisture I have seen hundreds rot off when quite large plants.

Palms for Decoration.

The leading palms, for which there was such a large sale for many years, up to two or three years ago, promise to be again popular this winter. The Boston fern was truly the plant for the past three years, and when you see the magnificent specimens that can be and are grown in living rooms and store windows, it richly deserves all the popularity it gained. Yet the kentia and areca, the latania and phoenix are going to sell well. Chief of all these is the kentia. You will often see a large collection of these useful palms in a retail establishment and yet with difficulty is one found that is actually perfect. This is because too many of them are lugged out to some function or other, packed and unpacked, bruised, brushed against and perhaps chilled. You can't take a kentia out half a dozen times, with the best of care, without it getting somewhat shop-worn.

So set aside those palms for decorating, big and little, and at the same time keep in perfect order and health those you have for sale and under no temptation let them go out "into society." At night 60 degrees is low enough for the small and medium-sized palms that you offer for sale, but 50 degrees at night will do very well for the large plants you use for decorations. A moderately low temperature is quite as well for them, as they will feel less the great changes of temperature to which they are too frequently exposed. If I mistake not, early signs say that the medium-sized palms that will retail at from $3 to $8 are "coming in" again.

Imported Hardy Shrubs.

The hardy shrubs from Europe will not be here for a week or two, but I have seen them arrive when we had a spell of very severe weather. Even if most of the deciduous flowering shrubs we force are hardy in the open ground during our coldest winters, that is no reason why, after being in a close box in the hold of a vessel and on the cars for sometimes three weeks, that they are in any condition to stand a zero freeze, which I have seen them exposed to when unpacked, greatly to their damage. The deutzia, lilac, prunus, pyrus, wistaria, viburnum and the Ghent azaleas are all hardy, yet when first taken out of the packing cases, if the weather is severe, they should be stood in a cool shed for a few days and at the first opportunity heeled in with plenty of soil around their roots in a deep cold-frame, where they can be protected with sash and mats or shutters.

Importing nurserymen have houses especially adapted for this purpose, with no artificial heat, yet constructed so that no frost enters. This would be an ideal place. In place of that, the small importer can get along very nicely with a substantial cold-frame. It is the sudden exposure to frost after being first unpacked that does the harm. Later on severe cold may do them no harm. Rhododendrons will do very well with the same treatment. They are bulky plants and you can not afford to give them bench room all winter, even if it were good for them. The temperature of protected cold-frames is more congenial to them and two months on your benches is all you can afford.

Young Ferns.

I think there are many young ferns, of which we have to keep a few thousand all winter for filling fern dishes, much injured, and sometimes entirely ruined, by being placed on a bench which is usually an inch board and there may be three or four 4-inch pipes beneath it. There may be a scant half-inch of sand or ashes on the boards, but when firing strong the sand or ashes get dry and warm and that's the very worst condition for these little ferns in 2-inch or 3-inch pots. It is doubtful if any ferns like fire heat near their roots.

Ferns, the very great majority, like moisture. Not the moisture we produce by syringing, as we do palms, but a steady moisture at the roots and surrounding them. Those who have noticed where the wild ferns grow, know that they are found beneath the shade of larger vegetation, on shady banks, on the margins of streams and often where there is a constant trickling of water over rocks. There are exceptions to this we know, but all the ferns we grow for fern dishes are tropical and, while they do not want spraying, the surroundings should be moist; hot, dry sand parching the roots in the little pots is the very worst condition for them. So if you must put them on benches over pipes, put a depth of sand, ashes or soil that will not dry out.

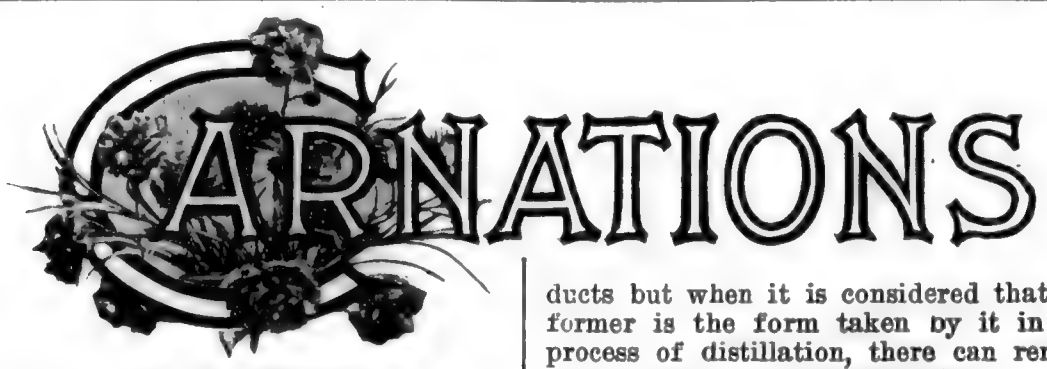
Genista.

As Easter is very late, this pretty yellow flower is likely to be too early unless you keep it cool. It does not make as much growth in summer as in the cool of winter. When the young growths are two or three inches long they can be clipped back to make the plants rounding and shapely, but don't do any clipping or stopping after New Year's or the flowering growths will be short and stubby.

Rambler Roses.

I have mentioned several times that just about now there is danger of your pot-grown Ramblers, in case a warm spell occurs, breaking at their strongest eyes, which would be unfortunate. They are as well laid on their sides for the next three or four weeks, or until you put them away in cold-frames for a rest until you force them. Don't, however, if the weather is bright and dry, let them get dust dry. Now, when you have them so far along, they will well repay a little extra labor. Water once a week will do, for the foliage is about gone. There is a difference between moderately moist and a soaking for two or three days.

Primula Obconica.



Primula obconica is sure to be as popular and useful as ever and, with the wonderful improvement in size and color of flower, it is now indispensable. What a pity it poisons some people. I thought for years it was all imagination or affectation. Of a dozen men and boys who handle it and speak as they pass by, not one complains, yet we have a very successful lady florist on Main street who has to run out at the back door if she sees P. obconica coming in at the front. It is a beautiful pot plant all winter and the cut sprays are most useful in designs.

We planted out the little plants from the seed pans in May, to some flats of finely prepared soil, and in July transplanted about eight inches apart in four or five inches of soil on a bench. Those we want for pot plants for Christmas can now be lifted and potted in 5-inch or 6-inch pots. They take no notice of the lifting any more than a pansy. If kept very cool the others can remain on the bench until February. For cut flowers, if given more room on the bench and a night temperature of 50 degrees it is a much more satisfactory way of growing them than in pots.

Smilax.

Of all criminal negligence in the greenhouse, the most inexcusable is letting your smilax bed go without strings. A bed planted at the first of July should be now ready for first cutting. Don't pick out good strings here and there. Clear it off as you go, and then keep the portion cut on the dry side until you see young growths start. A heavy watering after you have denuded the plant of all growth is most liable to rot the fleshy roots and they are then about as fragrant as rotten potatoes. Tie up the strings again before the young growth is long, or it will soon get tangled up and no amount of patience will make a perfect string. After the first crop is cut and another crop has a good start, put on a mulch of one inch of manure not too far decayed. Like all its family, it is a heavy feeder. A heavy loam, plenty of manure and a strong heat, not less than 60 degrees, at night, are the conditions which make smilax profitable. William Scott.

BUDS AND FLOWERS ROT.

I would like to know the reason why my carnation buds rot in the center before they open and even when they are open. I give them a good soaking once a week and after they are sprinkled they are spotted white. B. C. H.

While I cannot say with certainty that all the fault lies in your method of watering, yet I feel sure that much of it comes from that source. If the trouble is not brought on by it, it certainly is aggravated by it. To give your carnations a good soaking once each week, regardless of the condition of the soil, is the greatest folly. You should water when the soil is in the proper condition, which may be once in one week and three times the next week, according to the weather, and besides this you should look over the beds every day and water the dry spots along the edges, etc.

Those white spots are not caused by the sprinkling, but by thrips, and you will do well to get after them in earnest at once. Get some of To-bak-ine liquid and spray them every morning for a couple of weeks, providing the day is bright, and you will get rid of them. The only way to get rid of this little fellow is to go after him with hammer and tongs, as the saying is, and clear him out with a rush.

A. F. J. Baur.

CARNATION NOTES.—EAST.

The Use of Sulphur.

I have many times in these notes referred to the use of sulphur as a means of combating and preventing fungous or other diseases and, in view of several inquiries, will give different methods of utilizing this valuable remedy.

The most common way of using sulphur is in the dry powder form, applied with a bellows. The more finely the powder is divided the more effectual; therefore it is better to employ flowers of sulphur than that obtained by reducing lump sulphur to a powder. Some contend that there is no difference in these two products but when it is considered that the former is the form taken by it in the process of distillation, there can remain little doubt of the dissimilarity.

It is generally conceded that the chief remedial properties of sulphur lie in its fumes; hence the advice to apply the powder in a manner that the sun's heat may extract and cause these fumes to be diffused.

During periods of continued cloudy or stormy weather it is sometimes desirable to offset the effect of the damp atmosphere by other means than wholly with artificial heat. This is accomplished by applying sulphur to the heating pipes in the form of paint, covering only enough surface to produce a subtle odor of sulphur through the house.

Several methods are employed to prepare the sulphur in paint form but I favor its mixture with lime in the following manner. Slake a quantity of lime in hot water which will cause violent boiling; add the sulphur while boiling most violently, stirring thoroughly; allow one pound of sulphur to about four gallons of wash, which when cool should be about the consistency of cream.

Aside from the use of this mixture on heating pipes, it can be diluted with water, allowed to settle and the clear yellow liquid drawn off. Being a combination of sulphur and lime in solution, it has seemed to me of value used as a spray or otherwise and numerous experiments have given very satisfactory results. Geo. S. Osborn.

CARNATION NOTES.—WEST.

Seasonable Details.

While we have ceased overhead watering several weeks ago, yet we find that we cannot reduce the syringing down to once or twice each week. The nights are cool and invigorating, but most of the days are quite warm and about 11 in the morning we find that a light spraying overhead does the plants a great deal of good. We do not wet the walks, except perhaps where they are exposed to the sun all day, causing them to throw off too much heat for the good of the plants along the edges. Try now to get your plants a little hardened off by watering a little less than you did a month ago, but do not starve them by any means. The carnation is a water-loving plant when the conditions otherwise are favorable.

If the stems of some of the varieties are a little weak give them a light dressing of wood ashes. In fact, it will be quite beneficial to all of them about this time. It serves to tone up the plant's system and sweetens the soil. If the soil is not too full of roots stir it about a half inch deep with your hands, then sprinkle over it about a 3-inch pot of ashes to each row half way across a 5-foot bed and water thoroughly. The ashes will be mixed with the soil just as well and it will be much easier on your hands than to sprinkle on the ashes and stir them in afterward.

By this time you should have the tying up pretty well completed, as far as it is needed. Some of the taller varieties will already need the second tier, while many of the dwarfer and stiff-stemmed sorts will do very well on one tier for a little while yet. Don't delay adding the supports as they are needed, but the less strings, etc., there are in the way the better you can work the soil, etc.

Bench of Mrs. Lawson at Baur & Smith's, Indianapolis.
(House forty-five feet wide, plants in four inches soil on twelve inches cinders. Photographed April 10.)

Of course you are keeping the plants disbudded right along now, so that by this time you should be picking some very nice blooms. There is a vast difference in the quality of the blooms from the different varieties at this time and often we are inclined to judge a new variety too harshly because it fails to come up to our expectations early in the season, or, on the other hand, we may fall in love with a variety during this month and next, only to be all the more disappointed later on in the winter. Don't pass final judgment on any new variety you may have on trial until at least the end of the propagating season next spring. Last spring I heard of several growers who threw away their stock of Adonis only to buy a new stock of cuttings a little later, when it picked up so well for some of their neighbors. Then, again, there are those varieties which do not like warm weather, but produce grand blooms as soon as cool weather sets in. They may all be profitable when given a chance, and when judging a variety it should be when it is at its best, and not when it may be at its poorest. Study the wants of the new ones and try to see what can be done with them when they are grown as they should be.

GREEN CARNATIONS.

Is there such a thing as a green carnation? I am told there is, but have not heard of such a thing.

Elmwood.

I know of no carnation which produces blooms of a green color, nor would I grow it if I knew of one. The party who told you there is such a variety must have seen some blooms which were colored artificially. This is often done to meet the demand for something green to wear on St. Patrick's day and, while the process is simple enough, it is not known to everyone who handles flowers. You will find that if you cut some white blooms when they are just unfolded and set the stems into a dark green colored water they will draw up enough of the coloring matter to take on a lively green cast. Of course the people who buy the blooms imagine they have a naturally green bloom because they can see no coloring matter on the outside.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

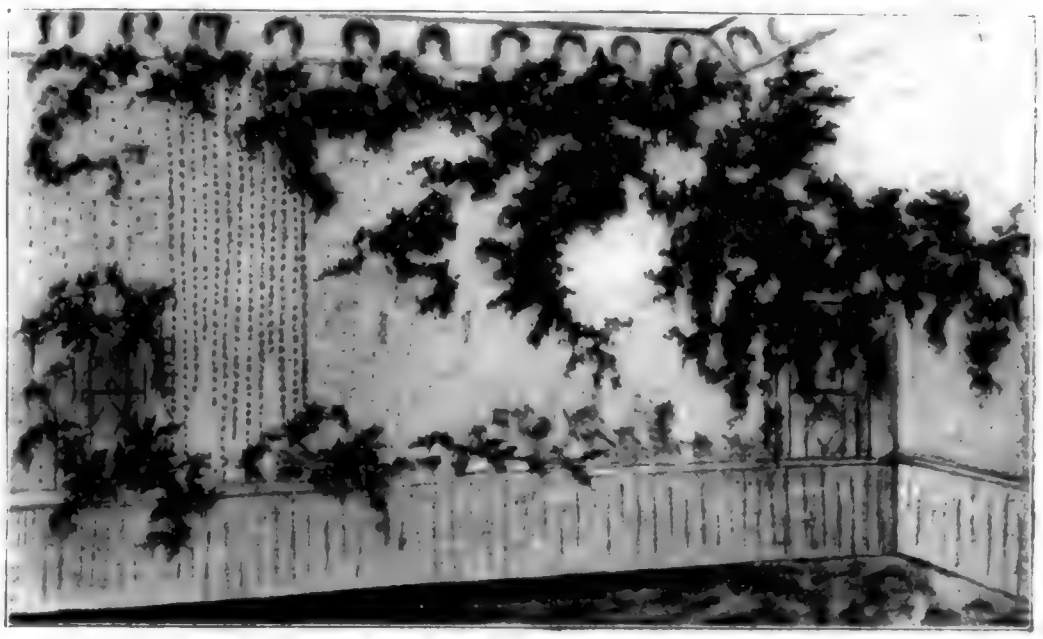
A Wall Decoration.

The illustration here presented is of a chapel wall at Christmas time. The material is wild smilax, holly sprays and berries. The wall was covered with ingrain paper, no figures at all appearing excepting the top border. This last part of the permanent decoration was carefully respected. No part of the temporary decoration was allowed to extend over the lower line of the border. A plain wall is always the most desirable for foliage or flower decorations.



The first part of the decoration to be put up was that of the tapestry effect which shows under the spray of smilax to the left. The material for this tapestry was strings of holly berries on linen thread. The loose holly berries from several empty cases of holly were saved and the work was done by a number of children. This they greatly enjoyed, which could hardly be said of a busy florist during Christmas week. It would be a long, tedious job for anybody else but children who were anxious to earn a little money for Christmas. Although such a task for one person, the results are well worth the work, for the bright berries retain the color for many weeks and the smilax as well. One end of the linen thread is wound around a tack which can be driven in along the lower line of the border without having the tack show. Place the strings about an inch apart. Make the longer ones to reach the top of the wainscoting below. Vary the lengths of the strings about as shown in the illustration. Along the top of the wainscoting make a sort of frieze of ordinary sized holly sprays. Tack these on with double pointed tacks on the top edge of the woodwork, being careful to make as few punctures as possible.

The principal part of the design represents one large spray of wild smilax with numerous drooping and side branches. The design is simple, but very decided. It is much easier, as has been emphasized before in these columns, to have a definite picture in mind of the design which is to be put up. With this end in view, select the sprays of smilax which can be easily connected and will fall into place to make the one large spray of the decoration. This was begun at the heavy end immediately over the window in the right corner. The first spray was tacked on the top of the woodwork of the window frame and spread out along the principal line of the large spray. One tack somewhere over the slender end of the top part of the branch will hold this part of the spray in place. The tip of the spray, as can be seen in the illustration, takes a decided curve downward. At the point where the principal line of this spray begins to deviate from the main line of the large spray, place the lower end of another spray of the smilax. Direct this last one upward and parallel with the lower line of the border. Tack it in place with not more than two or three of the staples, and repeat the process several times until the left upper end of the whole design is put in place. Do not lose the direction of the whole spray. Several of the drooping branches toward the center and left end of the spray can be put in last, as they seem to naturally fit in. Do not attempt to twist these tough stems nor turn them about from the position which the natural bend of the spray seems to demand. After completing the main spray, the large branch extending to the right along the side wall is attached to the main spray, fastened along the corner where the two walls meet, and terminated in much the same way as the far end of the spray. Where the sprays are fastened in the corners of the walls, several little side branches are trained out past the corner on the side wall to prevent an abrupt corner to the spray.

The left window is framed in holly sprays, following closely the outline of the window frame. Let the top of the wainscoting be the lower border of the whole decoration. Gertrude Blair.

A LOOSE BASKET.

One of the handsomest baskets of loosely arranged flowers seen recently was filled with Shasta daisies. It was a dark brown willow basket, oval in shape, about eighteen inches long and a foot wide. There was a low handle the long way of the basket. The basket was first filled rounding full of sphagnum, packed solidly and covered with ferns. Then a lot of Adiantum Croweanum was stemmed, two or three fronds on a pick. Next fine large Shasta daisies were stemmed singly on picks, the stems being a little longer than the adiantum. The filling was done so that the shorter daisies were on the sides and hung down, nearly hiding the basket from sight. A good deal of green was used, but not so much as to make the flowers seem few. The effect was loose and free but finished.

WORLD'S FAIR FLOWER SHOW.

A party of leading men in the trade met at the Sherman House, Chicago, last Saturday and organized the World's Fair Flower Show Association for the purpose of giving floriculture a boost by means of an exhibition of the first magnitude on the grounds of the St. Louis World's Fair. The dates chosen were November 7 to 12.

Among those present were President Philip Breitmeyer, of the S. A. F., Detroit; E. G. Hill, Richmond, Ind.; Elmer D. Smith, Adrian, Mich.; Fred Dorner, Jr., Lafayette, Ind.; H. W. Buckbee, John T. Buckbee, Chas. W. Johnson, Rockford, Ill., the principal growers in the vicinity of Chicago and other interested parties. E. G. Hill occupied the chair.

It was stated that President Francis, of the World's Fair, had authorized Chief Taylor to arrange with responsible parties to hold a flower show in the great conservatory adjoining the Palace of Horticulture, the Fair providing room, light, attendants and advertising without charge, the show management to pay the cash premiums and to be entitled to charge and retain an admission fee of 25 cents. Chief Taylor stated that the exposition gold, silver and bronze medals would be awarded to exhibits in this show the same as in other departments of the Fair. Henry Shaw medals will also be available.

The proposition being fully canvassed and the possibilities for the advancement of trade interests offset by the difficulties of accomplishing much work in a brief period, the question of ways and means came up. The only logical way seemed to be to raise a guarantee fund equal to the footings of the premium list to insure exhibitors the payment of their cash awards in full. This was the course pursued in the World's Fair Show at Chicago in 1893, when a dividend was paid instead of an assessment made. A canvass of the men at the table gave a total of $2,800. During the day this was augmented somewhat and it was voted to invite all horticulturists to unite with the present guarantors in making this a World's Exposition flower show.

The first step was the organization of the World's Fair Flower Show Association, with the following executive committee: Philip Breitmeyer, E. G. Hill, Leonard Kill, W. N. Rudd, Elmer D. Smith, Fred C. Weber and J. C. Vaughan. P. J. Hauswirth was engaged as director of the exhibition, headquarters to be at 227 Michigan avenue, Chicago, until about the first of November, after which Mr. Hauswirth will be at the exposition grounds.

The show having been determined upon and the funds in sight, the great essential was a premium list of sufficient scope to include all departments of the trade and with the money at hand so distributed in liberal sums as to bring out what all confidently expect will be the finest lot of exhibits staged anywhere this year and perhaps the finest display ever seen in this country, for there is any amount of good stock only waiting for a chance at World's Fair gold medals, with all expenses paid.

The following committee on premium list was appointed: Elmer D. Smith, W. N. Rudd, Jas. Hartshorne, C. W. Johnson and N. J. Wietor. They have prepared a list carrying a total of $6,000 divided into the most liberal premiums offered anywhere in this country this season. The list is all ready for publication save for the "O. K." of the exposition officials on the offers of World's Fair gold and silver medals. These are assured but will be awarded by exposition jurors under the same terms and restrictions as for any other exhibits. Doubtless the exposition will accept the same judges as are engaged to award the cash premiums, thus reducing the work.

P. J. Hauswirth.
(Director, World's Fair Flower Show, St. Louis, November 7-12.

Proofs of the premium list, which is already in type, afford the opportunity of selecting the following as illustrating the very liberal cash premiums:

One hundred cut blooms chrysanthemums, white, $75, $50, $25; same premiums for yellow and pink.

Three standard plants, $75, $50.

Collection cut blooms orchids, $100, $60. Same amounts for collections of orchid plants.

Best groups ferns, $75, $50, $25.

One hundred Beauties, $100, $75, $50, $25.

Best collection roses, not less than eight varieties, $75, $50, $25.

Vase 100 Beauties arranged for effect, $100, $75, $50, $25. Same amounts for vase of 100 mums arranged for effect.

One hundred blooms carnations, $25, $15, $10.

Chief Taylor writes that in every way in which he can further the show's interests he will use his best endeavors and in point of exhibits the success of the exhibition is already assured. All the big growers will be there in full force. With the rapidly increasing attendance at the fair, backed by liberal advertising, it is hoped to make an unqualified financial success as well.

Every interested party is requested to write P. J. Hauswirth, 227 Michigan avenue, Chicago, at once.

ROSES.

Seasonable Notes.

During the winter months, when the days are short and the duration of sunshine is reduced to a minimum, the general care of roses, upon which so much of our success depends in producing blooms in quantity and quality to make both ends meet, necessitates great attention, skill and vigilance without ceasing, both night and day.

If we are determined to succeed, the demands on our time and attention are immediate and pressing, as no crop under glass is so impatient of neglect as is this queen of flowers and the grower who fails to put his soul, energy and skill into the subject had better be out of it.

To enable the grower to give them the proper attention he must become an ardent and careful observer, noting every failure and trying to trace its cause. The act of searching for a cause will be the means of obtaining additional knowledge regarding the wants and character of each variety and also lead to a systematic study of the diseases to which they are liable and the most effectual method of combating such.

The long, dreary winter, with its lack of sunshine and cold, moist atmosphere, is the time to try the skill, ingenuity and patience of the grower and put him on his mettle, and he who faces his troubles with courage, energy and knowledge is sure of success.

What I consider as one of the most essential elements to success is to understand the true theory of watering, for if this knowledge is lacking there is certain to be trouble during this season, when evaporation is on the decrease and root action is less lively. In my long experience as a rose grower I have noticed that the majority of complaints during the winter season about stock going back can be attributed to over-watering and over-feeding, and rarely to the lack of it, and as a consequence I am naturally inclined to put a deal of stress on this subject.

Any neglect in tying and training at this season is bound to reflect on the future crops, for if shoots and branches are allowed to scramble and trail over the bench the eyes are certain to break weak and produce a crop of blind wood. Each shoot should be tied neatly and separately, allowing sufficient space between for free circulation of air, so that after applying the syringe the foliage may become dry with as little delay as possible.

A thorough knowledge of the theory of ventilation is also necessary to the rose grower and the reduction to an exact science should be practiced, as there is great danger to even the finest crops if indiscriminate ventilation is resorted to. Vigilance, careful watering, a thorough knowledge and practice of ventilating and temperature is the price of a crop of high grade blooms. Ribes.

FEEDING BEAUTIES.

I have started to feed Beauties that were planted May 1 with weak cow manure liquid. Is it advisable, and if so, how often? B. P. T.

Not knowing the condition nor stage of growth these Beauties have attained it is rather a difficult matter to give advice upon. If they have attained a strong, vigorous growth and filled the bench with roots, they may be in a condition to use a weak dose of liquid food once a week. I have, however, found it advisable to refrain from the use of liquid stimulants on young stock, and rather prefer giving them a light mulch till the days begin to lengthen. Liquid feeding has a tendency to produce a softer growth than is safe to enter on the winter with. Ribes.

Dendrobium Thyrsiflorum.

DENDROBIUMS.

There are few more showy orchids than the dendrobiums and the photographs reproduced, from plants grown at the establishment of Harry G. Selfridge, at Lake Geneva, Wis., show what skill and care can accomplish. C. H. Gebhardt, the gardener in charge, supplies the following description and cultural details:

Dendrobium Thyrsiflorum.

"The flowers are one and a half to two inches across, spirally arranged like grapes. The sepals and petals are white, throat orange yellow. It is from India. We keep this dendrobium at the resting season in a Mexican house, where the night temperature is from 50 to 55 degrees. During March and April, when most of dendrobes start into growth, we put them in a cattleya house, with a night temperature of 60 degrees and day rise of about 5 degrees. During summer months, from May to August, we put them in our East Indian house, with a night temperature of 65 to 70 and day 75 to 80 degrees. During September and October we return them, first to the cattleya house, and during winter to the Mexican house. In winter we give water only enough to keep the compost and surface moist and prevent the latest formed stem from shriveling, the amount being gradually increased as the young shoots appear. When new growths begin to make roots water must daily be given liberally until they have completed their growth, when a diminution should be made until the plants are again at rest. And so with the sprinkling and dampening down, a corresponding diminution must be made during the declining months of the year until winter comes again. We give plenty of ventilation in summer, from top and bottom; in spring and in fall, according to the weather, and in winter only top ventilation, as we are not able to open any bottom ventilation in winter, as all the side walls are banked with leaves to keep the houses warmer. We keep D. thyrsiflorum suspended from the roof.

Dendrobium Wardianum.

"This is from Burmah. The flowers are three to four inches across, wax-like in texture, sepals white with purple blotch at the tip; petals white heavily tipped with purple, lip bright yellow, with maroon blotches. We cultivate them similar to D. thyrsiflorum with the exception that in summer we give them more sun and after the growth is completed hang them in our rose house, suspended from the roof in the full sun. In winter, from November until March, we keep them in a north lean-to house, where the temperature is 45 degrees at night and keep them nearly perfectly dry until March, when we bring them first to the Mexican, next to the cattleya house until the buds start to open, then we let them bloom in the East Indian house. After flowering we transplant and keep them over summer in the East Indian house until the winter treatment starts again."

HOUSES AND THE MAN.

A grower who was particularly interested in roses recently visited a number of establishments in the vicinity of Chicago and noted, among other things, that the best lot of roses as well as about the poorest, were in comparatively new, high, light houses, differing but little in construction. The best Beauties were in new, even-span connected houses 27x300 feet, gutters eight feet from the ground, ridge seventeen feet six inches. These houses had continuous ventilation on both sides of the ridge, ventilators forty inches wide. In the side walls there was only one row of 24-inch glass and the plants in the side benches were, while not poor, not so good as the others. The second best lot of Beauties were in small even-span houses thirteen years old, posts four feet, ridge nine feet, ventilators operated by a wire and a stick. There was not so very much difference in the quality of the stock, although the man with the low houses has to tie his plants down when they get too tall and must grow teas on most of his side benches. It leads to the conclusion that, no matter how great an aid good houses are, the real essential is a grower who knows his business.

KEEPING CACTUS DAHLIAS.

I would like to know the best way to keep cactus dahlias in water. I have a very nice collection of the new sorts, but they are worthless as cut flowers. As soon as cut and put in water they go to sleep. We cut them early in the morning and put in a cool place, but it makes no difference; they wilt just the same. I have no trouble with the decorative or show sorts, only with the cactus varieties, like Kriemhilde, Winsome, Progenitor, Beatrice, Volker and all the newer ones.

C. H. G.

Many of the cactus varieties are very poor keepers as compared with the show, pompon and decorative types, yet several of the varieties, two of which are mentioned, particularly Winsome and Kriemhilde, we find very good keepers, and ship 500 to 1,000 miles, where they still give satisfaction. In fact, Kriemhilde will keep as long as any of the ordinary show dahlias.

In the first place all shoots should be removed, leaving the flower on the stem with its foliage just the same as a chrysanthemum, and they should be put into plenty of water until the stems are thoroughly filled, after which time there should be no trouble in packing and they should keep from two to four days, according to variety. If the young shoots and buds are allowed on they will absorb both strength and moisture which should go to the flower, causing the flower to wilt. A still better plan is to take off the buds and shoots, or, in other words, disbud the branch as soon as the main bud is large enough to show that it is perfect. The flower will be larger, the petals have much more texture and then by cutting the branches off and placing in water, the same as long-stemmed chrysanthemums, all of the cactus dahlias, with sufficient stem to hold the flower, will keep well for several days. There are, of course, exceptions with varieties like Volker, Earl of Pembroke and a number of others having such weak stems.

Chrysanthemums on Boards.

The showing of chrysanthemums on boards at Kansas City was a means to an end, which was satisfactory, pleasing and successful. If the chrysanthemums at Kansas City had not been exhibited in all the approved modern forms, then, and then only would the staging of blooms on mossed boards be open to criticism. With the same conditions I would use them again. It is an actual fact that for interesting the public—I mean the masses—the boards at Kansas City had as many, if not more, admirers, as the hundreds, fifties, twenty-fives and twelves in vases in all their magnificence, and they were magnificent.

LILIUM CANDIDIUM.

When the Lilium candidum arrived the bulbs had made a weak, pale growth three to four inches long. Could these be considered dormant bulbs and will they answer for forcing purposes?

E. K.

We are afraid your correspondent must have purchased his Lilium candidum bulbs unusually late to receive them in the condition named. This lily starts to grow about September 1 and to have the best success bulbs should be potted as soon as they can be procured from the seed houses, which is generally from August 20 to September 10. Bulbs kept later than September 20 in a store make both roots and leaves and, while they will still make fairly satisfactory flowering bulbs, they can hardly equal earlier potted ones.

The bulbs received cannot be considered dormant ones. We would recommend their being immediately potted, placed in a cool, airy frame until the foliage gets green and firm and then stand them outdoors, until severe frost threatens. A good freezing we consider necessary for the successful flowering of this beautiful lily. Keep as cool as possible until the bulbs are started. Never mind if the pots are frozen occasionally. Procure bulbs as early as possible another season and pot as soon as received.

SOILS AND MANURES FOR MUMS.

Dr. A. B. Griffiths has kindly provided the writer with an analysis of the chrysanthemum plant which shows the following chemical composition in parts per hundred:

Potash	16.2
Lime	26.3
Soda	10.4
Magnesia	10.2
Iron oxide	3.7
Phosphoric acid	19.5
Sulphuric acid	4.7
Chlorine	3.1

These figures show that lime forms an important constituent in the main structure of the chrysanthemum plant, comprising as it does more than one-quarter of its total mineral substance. Phosphoric acid is also a conspicuous element, while potash ranges third. Soda and magnesia come fourth on the list and are nearly equal in their proportions. The element nitrogen forms 2.92 per cent of the organic substance of the plant.

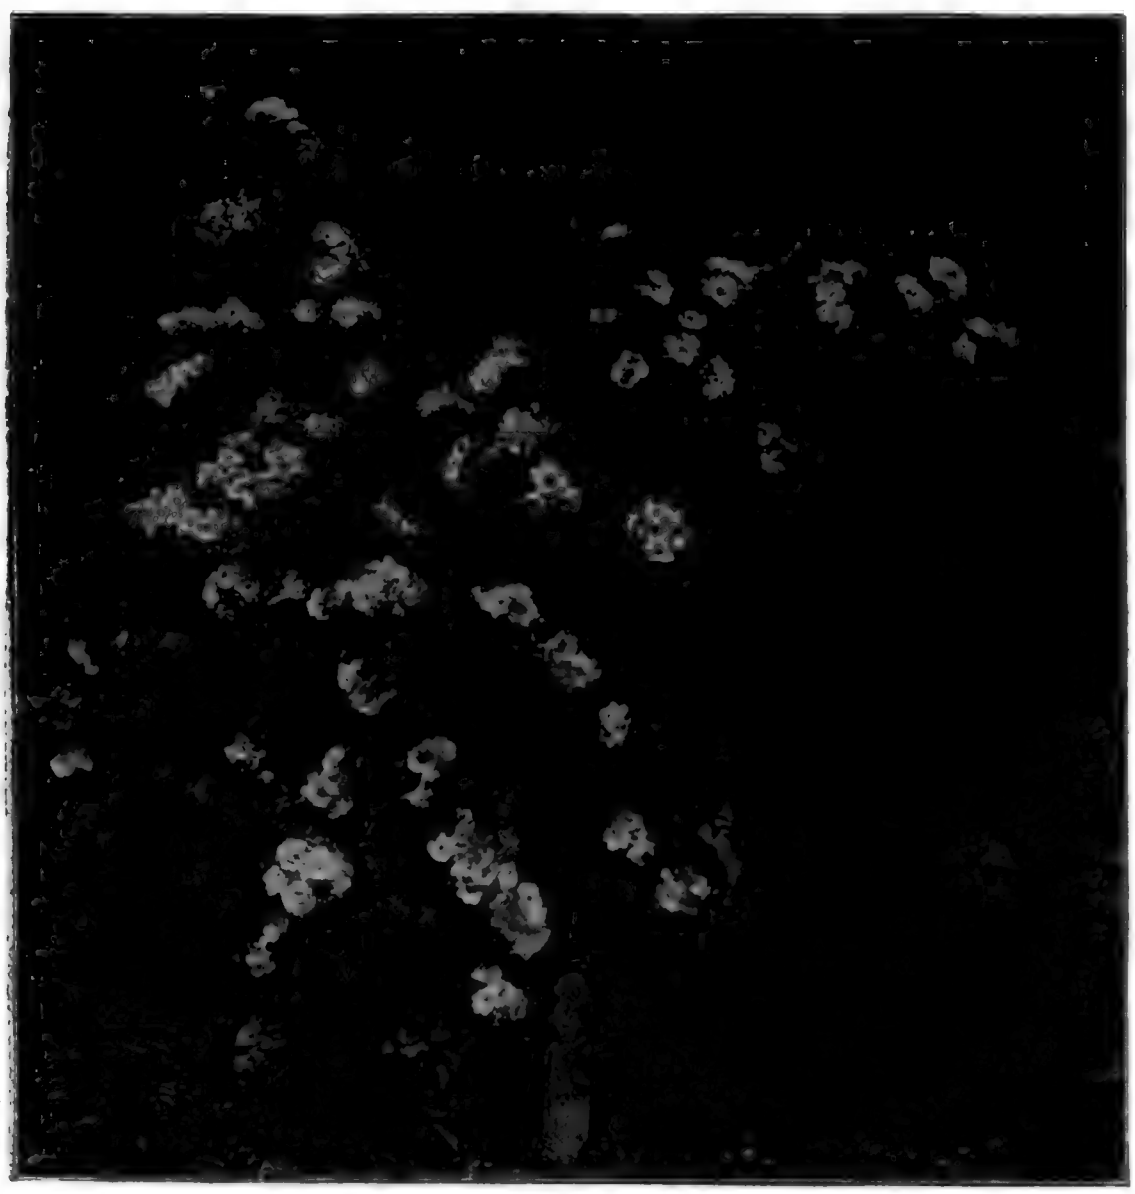
The chemical composition of the chrysanthemum seems to point, therefore, to the requirement of a fairly complete manure, of which superphosphate or bone meal should form a prominent part. The excellence of any crop does not resolve itself entirely into questions of the kind and amount of manure used. This is particularly true of the chrysanthemum. Consideration must be given to the variety of the plant and the character of the cutting. That a weak cutting or variety must receive different treatment from a hardy one is self-evident.

The physical condition of the soil is of almost as much moment as its chemical constitution. It is of prime importance that the soil should be porous, in order that thorough drainage and aeration be obtained. For this purpose it is well to mix with the soil a certain amount of sharp sand and charcoal, the presence of the latter being particularly desirable. The nature of the soil, too, governs the manner of potting. For a sturdy growth, light soil should be very firmly packed, while heavy soils require only loose packing.



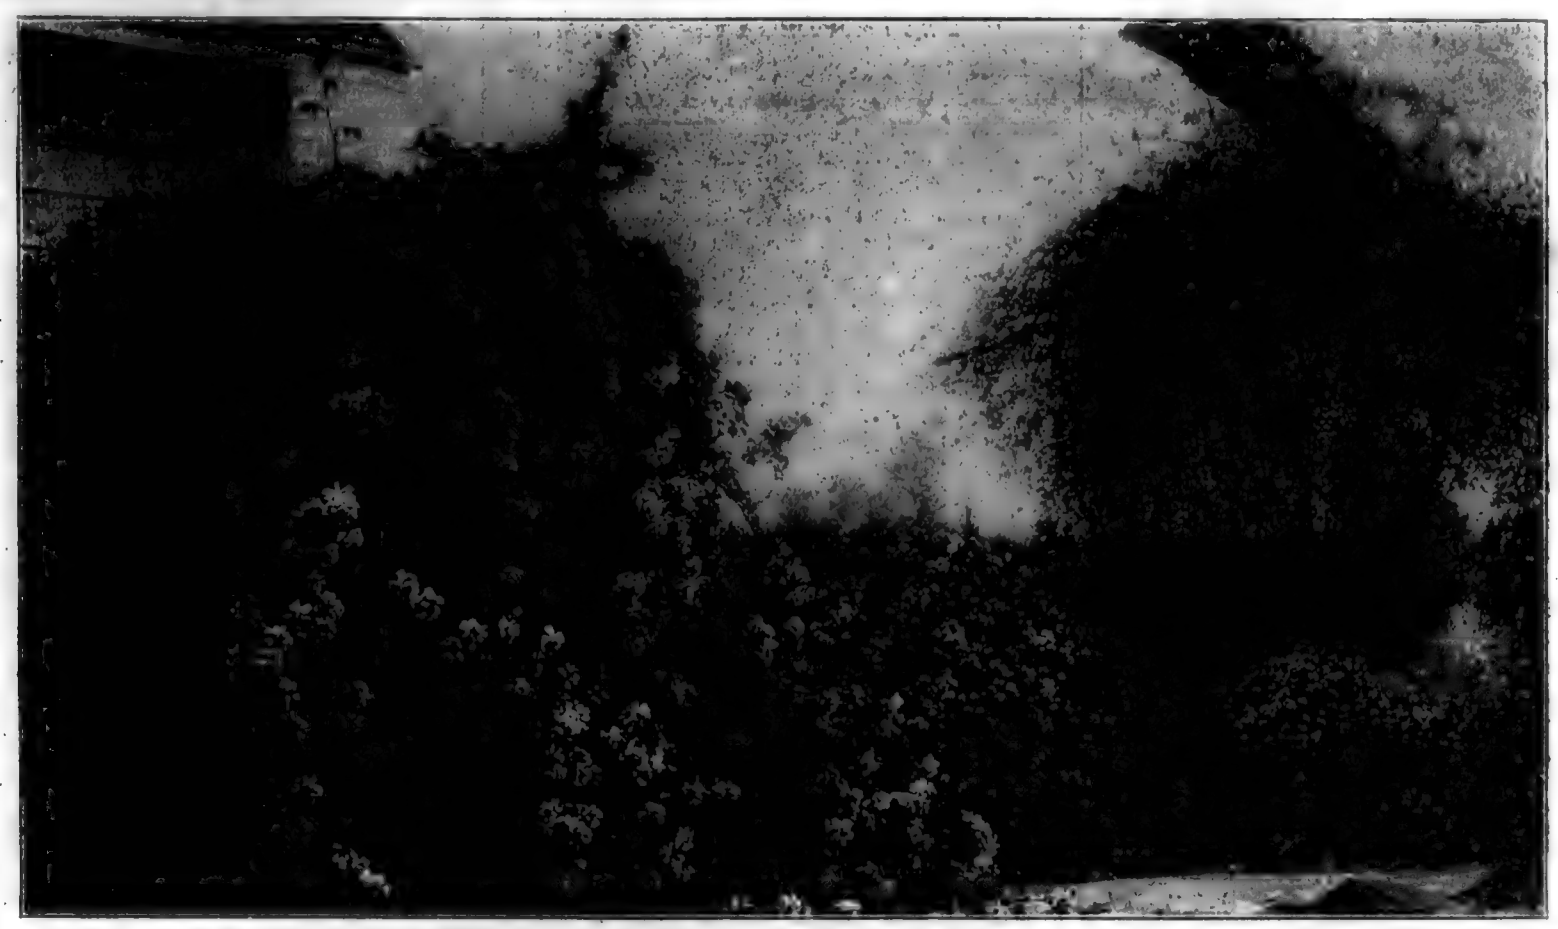
The question of the feeding of the chrysanthemum resolves itself into two parts, namely, the nature of the compost and of the subsequent feeding which takes place when the flower-buds appear. It is commonly held that the basis of the compost should consist of a good fibrous loam. The use of a very heavy clay loam brings with it the danger of waterlogged roots, while a very light sandy soil permits excessive drainage and consequent root starvation. It is preferable to err on the side of lightness rather than of heaviness.

With the loam, well-rotted stable manure may be mixed in various proportions, although the ratio of one part manure to three parts loam will probably give the best results. Horse, cow and sheep manure can all be used with good results, but cow manure is usually preferred, as it gives up its fertilizing properties gradually.

It is often advantageous to add to the compost one part in four of good leafmold; with the lighter soils this is particularly desirable, not so much because of any addition of nutrient material, but because of its power of retaining water and plant food.

Various animal as well as mineral fertilizers have frequently been added to the compost, and sometimes even used as substitutes for the stable manure. Guano has thus been used with good results; so has fish manure and dried blood. A very good practice is to add to every cubic yard (20 bushels) of compost forty pounds of finely ground bone, which not only serves as a source of phosphoric acid and lime, but also furnishes some nitrogen. Soot also has with advantage been made a part of the compost. This furnishes as much as three per cent nitrogen, chiefly as sulphate of ammonia, as well as small quantities of phosphoric acid and potash. It may be used at the rate of one to five pounds of soot to 100 pounds of the compost. Should the loam be at all deficient in lime, the deficiency should be corrected by the addition of a few handfuls of slaked lime (two or three pounds) per cubic yard of soil. A lack of lime will cause soft stems and flabby leaves. Its importance is shown by the foregoing chemical analysis.

Nitrate of soda and sulphate of ammonia have been recommended by some growers as a part of the compost. The evidence in favor of this practice is at present insufficient to commend it. It seems an unnecessary addition, with danger of a too concentrated soil solution, and waste of nitrogen through rapid drainage. Excessive concentration of nutrients in the soil solution is more injurious than a deficiency, because of the inability of the roots to absorb solutions above a certain degree of concentration. The result is that the plant starves. This fact has been very strikingly shown by some chrysanthemum cultures seen by the writer within the past few weeks. Again, in the presence of an excess of nutrients a good ball of roots is not produced, even though the cencentration of the soil solution is not too great for absorption by the roots; and, further, the roots are not in a condition to take up the subsequent liquid manure. The best plan is to have a moderately rich compost, thereby obtaining healthy roots, stems, and leaves, and then, when flower buds appear, to apply the rich liquid manures. Experiments have shown that nitrate of soda and sulphate of ammonia may be used as a substitute for stable manure, although not as an addition to it. Still, this does not at present seem practicable, the better plan being to reserve these for the subsequent feeding as liquid fertilizers.—J. J. Willis, in the Gardeners' Chronicle.



Rambler Rose Helene.

THE MARKET FOR MUMS.

Ed. Review:—In the market notes of a contemporary I see that a correspondent signing himself E. G. G. takes a shot at us in Chicago, saying that we are "blowing our horn" about selling mums at $4 a dozen; he says he wonders if they were not sold to some retail customer. As my name was mentioned in the news item which provoked this comment, I feel that I am privileged to rise to the defense of Chicago. In the first place, we wish to have it understood that we sell to the trade only. The chrysanthemums in question were Monrovia, grown by Gunnar Teilmann, Marion, Ind., and Mr. Teilmann has a statement which shows that for thirty-two dozen shipped between September 24 and October 3 his gross sales were $127.50, only one dozen of the thirty-two being sold for less than $4, and that brought $3.50. Such customers as Wienhoeber, Smyth, Samuelson, Mangel and Muir bought the stock. Our prices are governed by grade of goods, supply and demand. These mums were all sold to the trade and were worth the money at the time. E. C. Amling.

RAMBLER ROSE HELENE.

The new rambler rose, Helene, is a very strong grower. It originated with Peter Lambert, Trier, Germany, in 1897, and he says of it that it has in one season made several growths four meters (ten feet) long. It is a seedling from an unnamed seedling of Aglaia, crossed with Crimson Rambler. In growth it excels its parent and the flowers are larger in size. Lambert describes the color as clean, soft violet rose. It blooms early and freely, twenty to fifty flowers on a branch. The illustration is from a plant of Helene at the nursery of Ellwanger & Barry, Rochester.

The Market.

This delightful Indian summer is excellent weather for one phase of the commission business; it facilitates trading growers. They are all in a state of unrest and it is easy to get up a dicker. But market conditions are not nearly so bad as the dissatisfaction of the growers would indicate. The city buyers are taking good quantities of stock, including everything but violets, which are slow sale, and the out-of-town shipments are numerous and fairly heavy. The trouble comes that receipts are large and quality affected by the unseasonable heat. Even in this respect, however, there is already an improvement. Cuts are not so heavy as last week, although the proportion of low grade material is just as great and "clean-up" sales just as cheap.

The early mums are gone and the mid-season sorts not yet on in full force. Good Beauties sell well but are too abundant for any material stiffening in prices. Some tea roses are very good and in demand, with others soft or mildewed and unsalable except for cheap work. Liberty is fine. Outdoor carnations still oppress the market. Fine dahlias are offered. It is too warm for violets, even fine Hudson river stock going very slow. These are again received in quantity. Smilax is in brisk demand and pretty well cut out. It is the one item strong in price.

The Chicago Show.

If anyone has an idea that because of the St. Louis show interest in the local exhibition will be any less he wants to disabuse himself of it right away. Chicago is going to have the best show of the year. There was a meeting of the executive committee of the Horticultural Society at the Auditorium Monday afternoon at which the work was pushed along with a will. Seldom, if ever, have there been so many interested workers. Everyone wants to do something to make the Chicago show the success it should be. The poster will be ready November 1.

Various Notes.

H. Bauske is one of the growers who does not find it necessary to rebuild his houses every few years in order to maintain the quality of the stock. He grows good stock in any kind of house, no matter how old, because he neglects none of the infinite details of good culture, keeps his houses always freshly painted and as clean as though perpetually swept by a new broom. If Mr. Bauske has his slippers on, he doesn't like to have to stop to put on his gum boots before he can go into the greenhouses. It is an example which many would make money by following. He grows Beauty, Bride, Maid and Liberty. The cut goes to the A. L. Randall Co.

L. Baumann & Co. report being more than pleased at the way their florists' supply business has grown in the short time they have been pushing it. Take, for instance, folding Christmas bells; their importation of one style amounts to 18,000 and practically all are sold. Besides they make a bell of their own, white, red, green and other colors, on which they are doing a big business. In fact it has for some time not been a question of getting business but of filling orders promptly. They are working nights and Sundays. They have the whole fourth floor and half the third at 76-78 Wabash avenue and a big storeroom on the north side.

Peter Reinberg says that good coal is the cheapest in the end. Pocahontas at $3.25 a ton he finds cheaper than any coal he has ever used, including Illinois and Indiana coals at much lower rates per ton. The Pocahontas has the lasting qualities, burns up clean, makes little smoke and gives great heat. He buys of Castner, Curran & Bullitt in the Old Colony building.

C. M. Dickinson spent a day at St. Paul last week. W. E. Lynch returned Monday from his trip to the Hudson river violet district and the Berkshire fern region. He says he saw to the shipping of two refrigerator cars of ferns, now in cold storage.

At the Growers' Market Crabb & Hunter reopened this week. Mrs. Mulliken, who had charge last season, is again on hand but now as Mrs. Jamieson. The F. Blondeel Co. will resume selling on November 1. Mrs. Fred Hills is again on hand each morning.

A. V. Jackson has given up rose growing and torn down his houses. Hereafter all his energies will be devoted to mushroom growing.

The Bensinger funeral on Sunday brought out one of the largest displays of flowers ever seen in Chicago. Mr. Bensinger was the founder of the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co., and many of the pieces were above the hundred-dollar mark.

All Saints' day, November 1, is annually the occasion for heavy shipments to New Orleans; nowhere else does it have any importance as reflected in demands on this market. The New Orleans shipments will go out October 29 and 30.

Kennicott Bros. Co. is doing a big business in wire work this month, but report wheat sheaves slow sale.

Frost has held off so long that the growers are putting carnations from the field in the benches from which the early mums were cut.

Wietor Bros. report shipping demand as very good the last few days.

D. Wood Brant is getting a large cut of Beauties. He ships the greater part of his product on standing orders.

Leonard Kill is chairman of a committee charged with the duty of procuring supplies so that a flower may be given to each lady who visits the flower show. He was also chairman of the program committee for the St. Gregory's church fair this week and if he is as successful in getting flowers as he was in getting advertisements for the program there will be a whole bouquet for each show visitor.

E. C. Amling has put in a vertical filing system to keep all his correspondence

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The debutantes, so dear to the heart of our Thorley, have come, commanding our choicest products for their coming-out teas. With them are the October weddings of their elder sisters, and some elaborate dinners, making quite a showing in business for mid-fall. The same accelerating influences have quickened the out-of-town demand, especially for Beauty, valley and chrysanthemums. The same flowers are favorites locally and in addition orchids and cosmos. In chrysanthemums yellow is more plentiful and probably the best seller. The varieties of the Pacific type are fast waning.

S. S. Pennock has two fine new sorts, Lager, an incurved yellow, and Mrs. S. T. Wright, a huge bronze, that brought the record price, $5 a dozen. The Leo Niessen Co. is handling some fine mums, in pink, white and yellow, the latter such sorts as Mrs. Parr, Robert Halliday and Lager, all very handsome. Beauties are in excellent form, while in fair supply. They have been scarce on several days. Carnations have fallen off in price owing to increased receipts and the quantity of other flowers. Valley has been in good supply.

Two Handsome Decorations.

Last Saturday Elihue Root, ex-Secretary of War, and Henry Cabot Lodge, senator from Massachusetts, spoke before a large audience in the Academy of Music. The building was appropriately decorated with bunting, electric lights, greenery and an immense eagle over the stage, the effect being carried out in the national colors. Before the meeting a dinner was given in honor of the distinguished visitors at the Union League. For this dinner the decorations were unusually choice. The circular table nine and one-half feet in diameter was set for eighteen persons. In the middle was a magnificent star in red, white and blue, the center being American Beauty roses, the five points of violets edging lilies of the valley, finished with ferns. Above, the chandelier was tastefully festooned with orchids. The sides of the room were banked with plants. These decorations were arranged by the Wm. Graham Co.

The Flower Market.

The second annual meeting of the stockholders of the Philadelphia Wholesale Flower Market was held in the secretary's room in Horticultural Hall last Monday morning. There was a good attendance, Wm. K. Harris presiding. The reports of the secretary and treasurer were read and adopted. The three retiring directors, Alfred Burton, David Rust and Herbert G. Tull, were unanimously re-elected. After the meeting a choice of stalls was sold at auction in the market, 1235-1237 Filbert street. Wm. K. Harris was auctioneer. So well did he do his work that the sale realized more than double the amount obtained last year. John Burton secured first choice.

A New Store.

F. & H. Merganthaler, wholesale growers of Bride, Bridesmaid and Kaiserin roses, will open a store on Germantown avenue, just below Chelten avenue, on or about November 1. The store, with greenhouse attached, is now in course of erection and promises to be neat and well equipped. It is directly opposite William Berger, whose success has probably inspired the new enterprise. It is to be hoped that healthy competition will attract plenty of business for both florists in this Germantown center.

The Work of John P. Cleary.

The two days' auction sale of plants held last week at Robert Craig & Son's realized fair prices, averaging, it was said, about ten per cent lower than last year. Buyers were not so plentiful, many of those who bought freely a year ago being stocked up. Bidding was at times discouraging, it being impossible to secure good figures from a crowd who did not care whether they got the stock or not. Under these circumstances the work of the auctioneer, John P. Cleary, shone out brightly. On the first afternoon, when the crowd increased to fair proportions and began bidding up a desirable lot of plants to full wholesale prices, he adroitly shifted them to the large palms for an hour, obtaining thereby fair value for the most valuable items on the list. A large amount of stock was sold at what, considering the bad weather and moderate attendance, may be termed fair prices on an average.

Various Notes.

Hugh Graham had an elaborate wedding at Bala last Saturday, including house and church. A feature was the bridesmaid's bouquets of pink chrysanthemums trimmed with paper in the old-fashioned way. A wedding anniversary at Oak Lane on Monday and a wedding at Chestnut Hill on Wednesday have kept him busy.

Robert Scott & Son, of Sharon Hill, are sending a few nice Florence Pemberton and Killarney roses to Samuel S. Pennock.

The Flower Market is receiving some nice chrysanthemums in three colors, also Enchantress carnations.

H. H. Battles has been busy with weddings and debutantes' teas, the latter chiefly out of town, so far.

Eugene Weiss is contemplating a new propagating house at his place at Hatboro.

Joseph Heacock has experienced a strong demand for large kentias.

Pennock Bros. have been doing a lot of decorating for weddings and debutantes' teas.

Samuel J. Bunting, though engaged in other fields, is still operating his greenhouses at Fifty-eighth and Elmwood avenues.

George Craig has his Eleventh street store and windows very attractively decorated.

Edward Reid, the fortunate possessor of fine Flora Hill carnation plants, can carefully pack a nice shipping order, recite "Robin Hood," exhibit his extra select valley and "josh" Phil, all at one and the same time.

The Philadelphia Cut Flower Company reports a steady increase in shipping orders.

Robert Crawford, Jr., was busily engaged in making up old-fashioned bouquets with paper edging last Saturday.

Charles Meckey, of Tioga, is sending in some nicely grown chrysanthemums in pots.

Henry Weiss, of Hatboro, has returned from Seattle and the Klondike. He talks of going west again in the winter.

Charles E. Meehan spent a pleasant afternoon lately with Jasper Lorimer on his farm at Croydon.

George Anderson reports his stuff in good shape for the winter.

Stephen B. Green is representing M. Rice & Co. throughout Philadelphia and district.

The Henry F. Michell Co. has solved the problem of how to utilize air space. They are putting two rooms, each six feet high, in place of one room twelve feet high, for their packing and shipping department at the back of the store.

Walter C. Baumann, one of the very few florists who has prospered in Roxborough, reports business just opening in that suburb.

Miss Burrell was married to J. Liddon Pennock, junior member of the firm of Pennock Bros., on Tuesday evening at the West Walnut Street Presbyterian church. Many prominent florists were present.

John G. Gardiner gave his ideas about hardy phlox at the meeting of the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society Tuesday evening. PHIL.

PAINESVILLE, O.—Carl Hagenburger, of West Mentor, is building a store and greenhouse here and will be ready to open for business in a few days. He already has a branch store at Madison.

The Market.

While prices of roses and chrysanthemums have softened somewhat during the past week, the market has cleaned out in a very satisfactory manner. Prices of lower grade Brides and Bridesmaids have taken a slump, a good many being disposed of at $1 per hundred, while we heard of some going as low as 50 cents in one of the markets. Good flowers still sell well, the demand for weddings, funeral work and social gatherings being excellent. Short-stemmed Beauties bring $4 and $5 per hundred and $25 seems to be about the other limit. Chrysanthemums vary all the way from 50 cents to $2.50 per dozen, a few fancies going a little higher. The quantity of these now coming in is quite large.

Carnations seem to hold their own wonderfully well and even a heavy output of chrysanthemums seems unlikely to materially affect prices on them. Enchantress is the leader and $4 has readily been paid for it. A few extra fancies brought $5 and good stock has brought $2.50 to $3 per hundred. Lawson and Harry Fenn are coming extra fine, the best reaching $4. Violets are increasing in quantity. One grower stated that he brought in 60,000 last week. Prices vary from 40 to 75 cents. Prices on asparagus and fern remain about the same.

Death of Arthur Hunnewell.

Arthur Hunnewell, eldest son of the late H. H. Hunnewell, of Wellesley, died very suddenly of heart disease October 17. He was born in Boston in 1845. His beautiful estate at Wellesley, adjoining that of his brother, Walter, is well known to horticulturists from all parts of America.

Various Notes.

Local growers report that a continuance of bright weather will be necessary to properly finish their blooms for the coming chrysanthemum exhibition. Growers of specimen plants are also of the opinion that the opening date may prove a trifle early for some varieties. President Herrington, of the C. S. A., has appointed the following committee to cooperate with the committee of arrangements of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society at the coming exhibition: William Nicholson, chairman; W. W. Edgar, Alexander Montgomery, Elijah A. Wood and Kenneth Finlayson. The intending exhibitors would confer a favor by notifying the secretary at Horticultural Hall, Boston, on or before November 1 respecting their exhibits and probable space needed. Entries are already coming in, to W. P. Rich, the secretary.

At the monthly meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club on October 18, satisfactory reports were received from the various committees in regard to the entertainment of visiting members of the C. S. A. A banquet will probably be decided upon. Members of the two flower markets are also co-operating.

J. K. M. L. Farquhar arrived home from his European trip on the Oceanic October 12. He reports a very enjoyable business outing. The coming exhibition will now demand a good deal of Mr. Farquhar's attention.

Peter Ball, the well known florist, opened a store in Malden on October 15. The opening was most auspicious and we have no doubt that it will prove a money maker for him.

The funeral of E. S. Spaulding, chairman of the selectmen of Lexington, on October 16, was the occasion of a fine display of flowers. N. F. Comley made up some very handsome pieces.

At the new market stock continues to clean out nicely. Messrs. N. F. Comley and Pater are sending in the best violets, several thousands a day each. Fair Maid, Queen and Lawson are reported the best selling carnations here. Some nice pansies are also coming in.

W. P. Rich, W. H. Spooner and J. A. Pettigrew attended the exhibition of the Worcester Horticultural Society as a delegation from the Massachusetts Horticultural Society on October 13. They report a fine exhibition and a first-class time.

James Wheeler has great faith in the new pure culture mushroom spawn. His experience with it last year was most gratifying. In a bed spawned on September 21 mushrooms appeared on October 12, which is remarkably quick time.

The gypsy moth continues to attract considerable attention from property owners in the infested sections. A representative gathering of mayors, selectmen, tree wardens and others was held in Boston on October 11 to try and arrange for concerted action. A further conference will be held in November. A mass meeting of Arlington residents, presided over by W. W. Rawson, discussed the same question on October 14. It was voted to ask for an appropriation of $3,000 at the next town meeting to assist in fighting the moths. Dr. C. L. Marlatt, of Washington, who spent three weeks in the infested sections last July, has issued his report. He believes that control of the pests can only be obtained by concerted action over the whole of the extensive infested area.

The directors of the Park Street Market, at a special meeting, awarded a stall to Geo. E. Buxton, of Nashua, N. H. It was felt that, although Mr. Buxton resides outside the state, his goods are of such high class that they would be a benefit to the market. W. Glidden will act as salesman for Mr. Buxton.

S. S. Skidelsky, of Philadelphia, who was in town the past week, pushing the sale of Cardinal and Fred Burki carnations, reports a fine sale for these novelties. He will make an exhibit at the approaching show.

J. A. Budlong & Sons Co., of Providence, R. I., are bringing in some superb Bride and Bridesmaid roses to the Park Street Market, splendid foliage, grand stems and grand blooms.

Quite a variety of chrysanthemums are now to be seen in the store windows. Some of the popular sorts are Willowbrook, Kalb, Robert Halliday, Monrovia, Ivory, October Sunshine, Miss Alice Byron and Mrs. Robinson.

The white sport from Mrs. Coombes submitted to the Boston committee of the C. S. A. on October 15, at the Park Street Market, by A. Herrington created a favorable impression. The flowers were hardly sufficiently developed and we hope to see it shown again, as it has all the ear-marks of a good commercial variety.

Alex. Montgomery is planning for a committee meeting of members of the American Rose Society on the occasion of the coming chrysanthemum exhibition.

William Nicholson thinks that field-grown carnations make the best stock. He is now cutting grand blooms from his new house planted on July 28. Of the new varieties Mrs. Patten, White Lawson and Lady Bountiful are doing finely. Flamingo so far is disappointing. It grows well and is full of flowers, but blooms look sleepy on the plant and are sound asleep twenty-four hours after picking. In whites Wolcott and The Queen are leaders. Eldorado is still the best yellow and J. H. Manley the best commercial scarlet. Enchantress leads in its color, followed by Fair Maid. Harry Fenn and Harlowarden are the best crimsons. Lawson is still the best of its color.

S. J. Goddard reports Enchantress away ahead of a year ago with him, readily selling at $4 per 100 and no complaints of its becoming sleepy. This experience appears to be general. Fair Maid he likes well, but does not consider it in the same class with Enchantress. Lady Bountiful lacks petals early in the season and feels the check of lifting but gives some nice blooms. White Lawson is extra good and will be more grown another season. The Queen is immense, a wonderful producer. Mrs. Patten is very fine and Flamingo just as sleepy, although color, stem and habit are ideal. Marion Buxton, of a lovely soft shade of pink, like old Grace Wilder, is doing finely.

H. M. Robinson & Co. have secured space in Province street for a salesroom of ferns and other greenery.

The Waban Rose Conservatories' new salesroom, opposite Houghton & Dutton, the dry goods merchants, is now open and looks very neat and cozy.

William E. Doyle is having a big call for the new rose, Wellesley, at his stores on Boylston and Beacon streets. Flowers are deep pink in color, edges of a lighter shade and blooms very fragrant.

The Gardeners' and Florists' Club meeting on October 18 brought out an extra large number of members. John K. M. L. Farquhar spoke on European horticultural advancement as seen in his recent trip.

There were some handsome wedding decorations the past week. At the Lowell-Lloyd nuptials at Emmanual church white chrysanthemums were chiefly used. Doyle was the decorator. At the Lawrence-Peabody wedding at Trinity church Bride roses and white chrysanthemums were used to fine effect.

The autumnal tints on trees and shrubs have been magnificent of late. In Franklin park, Boston, the colors have been especially fine. In the parkways and arboretums the berried shrubs are very attractive. Some of the roses, viburnums, among which V. Opulus is very brilliant; loniceras, cratægus and euonymus are especially notable. The nut crop is especially heavy and with the abundance of berries would seem to indicate a severe winter if the predictions of the weather-wise count for anything.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Trade in the cut flower line, as reported, was somewhat better the past week, as a number of social affairs used up quite a lot of choice stock, of which there was plenty at the commission houses.

Chrysanthemums, as usual at this time of the year, are crowding roses and carnations. They are coming in more freely and choice stock is selling well. The top prices are $2.50 to $3 per dozen. Mme. Bergmann and Polly Rose are quite plentiful, also Glory of Pacific and old Gloriosum, of the smaller varieties. The prices asked are $1 to $2 per dozen. By next week the market will be pretty well stocked with all varieties.

Roses are in fair demand and, like the mums, only the choice goods in demand. American Beauties are in big supply just now. Extra choice long bring from $3 to $5 per dozen. Others are as low as $1 to $2 per dozen and a big lot of short-stemmed ones at $4 to $6 per hundred. In Bride, Maid, Meteor, Liberty, Perle and Carnot there is a big supply of good stock. Firsts bring $5 and $6 per hundred, seconds $2 and $3, shorts as low as $1.

Carnations are plentiful and some of them of extra quality. The top price is $2 per 100, and as low as $1. Rose Queen, Flora Hill, Enchantress, Boston Market and Joost are the most looked after this week. Violets are coming better, but yet too small for good sales. The best prices are 25 and 35 cents. The cool weather the past week should improve them greatly.

Valley is fine and plentiful. Outdoor stock, such as cosmos, tuberoses and dahlias, is about over for this season. Smilax looks well and has a good call at 15 cents. Of all other greens the market is in good supply, with a good demand.

Good chrysanthemum plants are not yet to be seen, but the growers, Messrs. Windler, Schray, Sanders and Beyer, say that by next week the stock will be in fine shape.

Club Meeting.

The regular meeting of the Florists' Club was held October 13, President Juengel presiding. Twenty members were present. All convention committees made their final reports and were discharged with thanks. Communications were read from the Detroit and New York clubs thanking the members for the treatment received by their members who attended the convention; also a communication from President Breitmeyer regarding the National Flower Show at the World's Fair.

Two members were elected to membership, Andrew Olsen, of St. Louis, and W. A. Chalfant, of Springfield, Mo. Four applications for membership were filed, by C. C. Sanders, Fred H. Weber, Henry Lohrenz, all of this city, and Swan Peterson, of Gibson City, Ill.

It was decided that at the next meeting of the club a chrysanthemum show would be held in the club rooms, for which the club has offered $50 in prizes. A committee was appointed by the chair to take charge of the management. The committee consists of J. J. Beneke, F. H. Meinhardt, Emil Schray and Theo. Miller. The prizes are open to all chrysanthemum growers. This committee will meet this week and arrange a prize list, which will be mailed to the growers.

There was quite a discussion regarding the disposition of the convention funds left over. This was left open until the December meeting, when it will come up for final disposal.

Swan Peterson, of Gibson City, Ill., was present and gave the boys a talk on carnations, at the same time exhibiting a sample of Gibson Beauty, which was much admired.

W. J. Pilcher, vice-president of the club, was prevented from attending the meeting owing to the death of his mother. The club extended a vote of sympathy.

The question box failed to bring out as lively a discussion as heretofore.

The next meeting of the club should be a hummer. The chrysanthemum exhibition should bring out the largest attendance the club has yet had. This meeting will be on Thursday afternoon, November 10, at 2 o'clock.

Various Notes.

Visitors who belong to the craft and who are spending a few days with us and at the fair are Mr. and Mrs. Rauth, Springfield, Ill.; A. E. Mauff, Denver; Mr. Vesey, Kansas City; Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Thompson, Joliet, Ill.; Mrs. Morat and her daughter, Mrs. Jacob Schulz, Louisville; Swan Peterson, Gibson City, Ill.; Allen McGregor, Springfield, O.; Geo. M. Kellogg, Pleasant Hill.

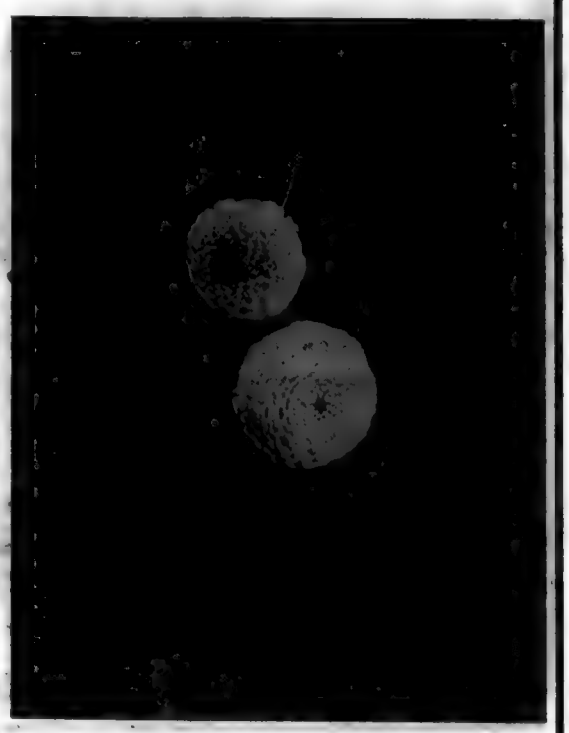
The Michel Plant and Bulb Co. is to have an auction sale on Thursday, October 20, at 10 a. m., for the disposal of some 2,000 plants of all kinds.

Wm. Schray & Sons received notice that they have been awarded a gold medal for their new canna at the World's Fair. They have named it Superior. It's the only one that is now in full bloom on the grounds.

A. G. Bentzen, on Marcus avenue, has just finished two new houses and reports everything in tip-top shape for the winter season. Mr. Bentzen has a fine lot of palms and Boston ferns.

J. F. Stinson, superintendent of pomology in the Horticultural building, World's Fair, was presented the past week with a handsome gold and enameled medal as a token of esteem from the exhibitors in the Palace of Horticulture.

The city park commission is at a loss as to the kind of trees to plant in City Hall Park, as over half of them have died. Maples and elms have been tried and the oak cannot grow where there are paths and granitoid, as all the roots lie close to the surface. A few suggestions from the outside would help them out of this trouble and no doubt be greatly appreciated.



The Simmons Hardware Co. is opening its china department and there are prizes offered for the best table decoration and best arranged bride's reception decoration. Four florists have entered. They are Ostertag Bros., Ellison Floral Co., C. Young & Sons Co. and Miss M. S. Newman. The public is to be the judges by their votes. We hope justice will be done.

R. J. Mohr, late of St. Louis, is now with W. J. Smyth in Chicago. Mr. Mohr is a member of our local club and the members wish him well in his new position.

Robert Beyer surprised the craft by coming down town last week. Some say this is "Bob's" first visit down town since the S. A. F. convention in 1893. His friends hardly knew him. J. J. B.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

There is little encouragement for the wholesale trade in present market conditions and there will not be until summer temperature has departed. A perfect flood of chrysanthemums is now in evidence and there will be a rising tide of the supply of the autumn queen for many weeks to come. While they last the rest of the market will be demoralized. Repetition of specification seems unnecessary. Roses, valley and even orchids share in the general depression.

Various Notes.

The auctions are still in full blast. Tuesday Elliott had his annual "red letter sale," which meant a restocking of retail stores. Dreyer's big sale at Woodside comes on Wednesday and Thursday and the usual sales in the city on Friday make this an "auction week."

A. J. Rickards and John Ringier are both back at headquarters with the Stumpp & Walter Co. after months of successful travel.

H. H. Berger & Co. report an unprecedented fall business and regret their importations were not double the amounts received. They suggest the certainty of a shortage in the supply of Paper Whites, tulips and longiflorums.

J. I. Raynor last week celebrated the sixteenth anniversary of his wedding and his store and handsome new signs indicate a faith in the future that should have due effect upon the many new ships venturing on the wholesale sea. When the wind changes there will be little cause for any firm building its hopes on square dealing to fear the outcome.

A familiar name, one of the old-timers, appears on a store on Twenty-ninth street this week, that of Michael Hart.

A new retailer has come to town from society's summer center, Newport, Jos. Leikens, formerly of the Siebrecht forces, and has located at 7 East Thirty-third street, under the shadow of the Waldorf-Astoria.

Some fine Queen of Edgley are coming to Moore, Hentz & Nash.

Traendly & Schenck report increased shipments out of town and as far west as Rochester, with roses, carnations and violets most in demand, many of the latter going to Washington.

November 14 is chrysanthemum night at the club. President Traendly is especially anxious that early preparations be made by intending exhibitors. Special exhibits of any seasonable flower will also be welcomed at that time. The great show under the auspices of the American Institute will be at its height and visiting florists are requested to arrange for attendance at the club rooms in the Grand Opera House building on that occasion.

John Young is handling daily shipments of Ward's grand new carnations, many novelties among them, including the fine red Robert Craig, which readily commands 5 to 6 cents and which Mr. Young characterizes as a "sensation."

A. H. Langjahr has added a horse and wagon to his many facilities for the convenience of his city customers.

N. Lecakes & Co. have added a cut flower department to their green goods business, with John A. Foley as manager, and are now handling large quantities of smilax and asparagus.

Saltford's big store was overrunning with mums on Monday, four wagon loads being his share of the arriving shipments. He had some superb stock among them, Lager and Glory of Pacific, Halliday Robinson and Adele. He is also receiving splendid Lawsons, some 2,000 daily. As his faithful bookkeeper is Miss Lawson, there is never a day when this variety, in one form or another, is not in evidence.

Charles Millang has a special department of his conservatory devoted entirely to chrysanthemums where they can be shown to great advantage, the electric lighting of his establishment now adding greatly to its conveniences with the rapid shortening of the days.

The retailers are rapidly preparing for the opening of the fall season and already some large weddings have taken place, calling for extensive decorative work.

Thos. Young, Jr., had the Strauss-Hess wedding at Elberon last Wednesday. Manager W. H. Donohue with ten assistants were four days completing the decorations. Two carloads of palms were sent down and orchids, swainsona and several thousand Beauties were utilized in the work.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

Trade has been holding up very well this week, with the exception of one or two days, which were a little quiet. Chrysanthemums have the center of the stage at present and were never more plentiful or as good as this season. Bergmann, Pacific, Estelle and Willowbrook are about cut. Omega, Chalfant, October Sunshine and White Robinson are now on the board and are exceptionally fine. The good ones command fair prices and the poorer ones are sold very cheap.

Various Notes.

The Liberty Flower Market opened a new flower stand in the Liberty Market. The result was a stirring up of things in general and a cutting down of prices, as it is reported that carnations sold two dozen for 25 cents and chrysanthemums at 50 cents per dozen. Some say competition is the life of trade, and it certainly had the effect of making things quite lively out that way.

Jos. E. Bonsall, of Salem, O., who sold out his greenhouses and retail business last spring, could not stand being idle and put up a few houses just to amuse himself, in which he is growing mums and such stock as will be cleaned out before the houses freeze up, as he has not provided heat of any kind. When they freeze up he is going to lock the doors and take his good wife for a pleasure trip to Washington, D. C., Richmond, Va., Old Point and finally to Florida to finish the winter. He says there will be no schedule, but just move about as the humor takes them. Boys, that is what industry, honesty, strict integrity and thrift will bring you if you work at it.

The wholesalers and retailers are about to form bowling teams. They met for the first practice on one of the local alleys last Friday night and all seemed full of enthusiasm about it. If this enthusiasm holds out and some of the boys get over their curiosity about what the holes are in the ball for, and find out that they do not need to throw the ball so that it will drop in the center of the pins, some of the eastern and western friends will have to look to their laurels.

J. B. Murdoch & Co. are completing a very fine refrigerator in their new store and are making things look quite comfortable, as well as making quite a bid for their share of the business.

T. M. Ulam & Co. had quite a rush the latter part of the week in large funeral designs. Tom is a hustler and usually gets his share of the good things going about.

The Blind boys, who recently changed all the roads on their place so as to cut out all grades and give the place a better appearance, are finishing by erecting a large bank barn.

Ernst Fischer, of Castle Shannon, has bought a farm out on the Brownsville road and will move his greenhouse plant to the new location. Thus the Pittsburg smoke drives the cut flower growers farther out every year.

W. A. Clarke spent last Sunday at Crystal farm, visiting Fred Burki. I wish you could hear him enthuse.

Uncle John Wyland is cutting some very fine carnations, which he is sending to the Florists' Exchange.

F. H. Westhoff, of Allison Park, is cutting some very fine carnations.

The Washington Floral Co., Washington, Pa., is consigning the Cut Flower Co. some fine mums and carnations.

BALTIMORE.

"Mum" is now the word. The supply of white is considerably more than the demand. Pink and yellow are less plentiful and nearly all have been sold up to date. Best Kalb, Willowbrook and Estelle have been going at $1.50 per dozen, with smaller ones down to $5 per hundred. Unless they begin to move more freely in the next two days the price will drop considerably. The average quality of all varieties is good. Carnations are about sufficient to supply the demand. Good roses are a little scarce. At 6 o'clock Monday there was nothing to be had at the Exchange excepting mums, every rose of every grade having been sold. Callas and violets are coming in limited quantity and not very good yet. Valley was sold by the street men last Saturday at $1 per hundred, violets, good ones, at 50 cents. It seems to me the growers farther north must be getting much less for stock than the market price here, as the valley and violets came from the north. Violets are wholesaling here at 50 cents. There are still a few outdoor flowers, but the cool nights have a telling effect on them.

There will be an exhibition of mums at the next meeting of the Gardeners' Club, Monday, October 25, 8 p. m. The merits of the various varieties will be discussed. A large attendance is expected.

A. F.

LANSING, MICH.—G. H. Riley and Mrs. Riley are both engaged in the business. Mr. Riley grows lettuce for the local market and Mrs. Riley grows carnations, violets and a few mums. They have just added two houses 14x80, intending to try violets for the wholesale market.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—John G. Eisele is tearing down his nursery at Twentieth street and Ontario avenue after thirty-five years of activity in growing a general assortment of plants and cut flowers for his local and wholesale trade. Mr. Eisele at one time was the owner of the whole square of ground between Westmoreland street and Ontario avenue and from Twentieth street part way to Uber street. Builders have gradually bought sections of the ground and built dwellings thereon until he is hemmed in on all sides. Mr. Eisele himself has built nine dwelling houses and at present is building six more on Twentieth street, below Bellevue street. He claims there is more money in houses than in growing plants at the present time. Although very busy with his building operations, Mr. Eisele is not retiring altogether from the florists' business, as he is now building an office and three greenhouses of about 3,000 feet of glass next to his dwelling for the convenience of his Tioga trade, which is quite extensive, and also as he says to keep his mind occupied, for he cannot be idle. Mr. Eisele also has a city salesroom on Columbia avenue, which is managed by his son.

THE fine weather of the past week has added considerable to the standing seed crops and has been of great benefit in drying out crops that are ready to thresh.

COMMISSION men say the present month has been the best October for garden produce in many years. Cauliflower is especially abundant and the quality of the heads is far above the average.

J. W. DEAL, of W. W. Johnson & Son, Boston, England, is quoted as saying that the black fly which attacked the broad and longpod beans while in flower last summer, made it one of the worst seasons on record for these crops.

delicate crops, the Quedlinburg, Germany, seed crop in general is below middling. —Horticultural Trade Journal.

The damage by wet weather to the Michigan bean crop is not so serious as was feared. The varieties that come out damp after the threshing are not molded and will, in all probability, make good samples when hand-picked. The shrinkage from hand-picking will be heavy.

On October 12 the collector of customs at New York sold at auction 106 cases of Japanese longiflorum bulbs which had been abandoned by the importer. It is stated that they had arrived in a heated condition. The whole lot was sold to a New York seed house for $1 a case.

SEED CROPS AT ERFURT.

Erfurt is one of Germany's centers for seed growing. There are some twenty-five firms engaged in a large way, the practice being to contract with the farmers for most of the crops, so that it is difficult to inspect the whole. The following summary of conditions October 1 is from the Horticultural Trade Journal:

The month of September brought us an agreeable change from the persistent heat and drought which prevailed here during the summer and the seed growers have welcomed a return to more normal conditions. The beginning of the month inaugurated a cooler temperature and some good soaking rains have gone far to save certain crops which had previously seemed doomed to failure.

We are now in a position to judge fairly well of the results of most of our crops, and the following may be put down as quite satisfactory: Lettuce, both cabbage and cos varieties, cabbages, white and red; savoy, Brussels sprouts, beets, leek, parsnip, cress, endive and most of the herbs. Spinach is on the whole satisfactory, the prickly-seeded varieties having yielded the best. Cauliflowers are not quite answering the expectations we formed last month and the crop of Algiers is quite a short one this year. The situation regarding carrots is about the same as last reported, some of the short and half-long sorts are good, others middling, while the long kinds are in most cases likely to yield heavy crops. French beans are giving very unsatisfactory results; a few sorts may yield up to average but many are poor and some very bad. Runners having been a little helped by the rains, will be average to under average. As regards peas, wrinkled sorts are mostly fair, though some kinds, hardly tried by the drought, are decidedly short; blue round peas, on the other hand, have done remarkably well. Radishes are not very good and all varieties will yield under average; owing, however, to large stocks on hand the prices are not likely to advance much; winter radishes will, however, be dearer. Of borecoles the dwarf green curled is rather short in places, but all other sorts are in strong force. In kohl-rabi we have of early and frame sorts a crop from middling to poor, while the late sorts have done well, there is not likely to be any advance in price, however, as there is plenty of seed held over. Cucumbers are yielding below expectations. Mangels have in some cases yielded good crops and the general result is about an average one. Swedes are a bad crop, but the large yields of 1903 will prevent any serious shortage.

In flower seeds we have very good crops of carnations, hollyhocks, chrysanthemums, mignonette, ageratum, calliopsis, etc., while those of larkspurs, godetia and lobelia, as well as the perennials and biennials, such as bellis, single wallflowers and Canterbury bells are mostly up to average. Sweet peas are yielding above expectations and may be reported as satisfactory on the whole. Both large and small flowered varieties of petunia are good and there will be no shortages. Summer varieties of dianthus are poor, owing to the parching heat earlier. Verbenas are still doubtful, while phloxes are fairly good. As before advised, nasturtiums are very scarce, the combined attacks of insects and drought having practically destroyed the plantations. As regards the plants grown on stages, stocks and double wallflowers are not quite so promising as last month, having suffered considerably from the attentions of the black fly.

The greenhouse crops, begonias, gloxinia, cyclamen, calceolaria, cineraria, coleus, etc., have mostly done well, while primulas are only giving moderate results. Pansies have only given a middling crop, owing to the blooming season having been cut short by the intense heat. How the asters, our most important field crop, will turn out, is still uncertain, and all depends on the weather we get during the next few weeks; owing, however, to the hard conditions the plants had to contend with during the period of development, it is safe to say that the crop will be much below average.

Taking a view of the crops as a whole, it must be admitted that the general results are better than any of our growers, during the exceptionally hot and dry summer months, would have been inclined to predict.

MIXING SEEDS TO PRODUCE GRADES.

Seedsmen distinguish the two methods of producing grades as legitimate and illegitimate; even those seedsmen who knowingly sell adulterated seeds admit that such a course is not legitimate. On the other hand, mixing different grades is generally claimed by them to be proper, and, indeed, often necessary if the seedsman is to sell at a price his customers are willing to pay. Mixing seeds of a high grade with screenings clearly lowers its quality, and this is evident to any one who carefully examines the sample, but they argue that no intentional deception is practiced, although the new grade may be well stocked with weed seeds. The seedsman who adds adulterants has, however, a different object in view. He wishes to lower the cost of the seed to himself without injuring its appearance. Such seed is usually sold at a trifle below the market price of the grade for which it is offered, and is an injury to the legitimate trade as well as a fraud on the buyer. Adulterated seed is commonly offered on sample, but is sold usually to those not sufficiently informed to detect the deception.

The most frequent adulterant is yellow trefoil, a great deal of which has been imported into this country, some of it under the name of crimson clover. Most of this will doubtless be used to adulterate red clover seed, since the demand for trefoil seed is insignificant. The plant, although a legume, is objectionable in clover fields because it occupies ground that could be more profitably given to the clover plant and because it does not mature with the clover. The seed so closely resembles that of red clover that as much as thirty per cent can be mixed with the latter without being detected on casual examination. It is greenish yellow in color, and is distinguished by a minute projection in the neighborhood of the scar that marks the point of attachment of the seed in the fruit. Another adulterant sometimes used is the seed of Hungarian grass. The small seeds are used which in size closely approximate the clover. The dark color also readily blends with high-grade clover seed and enables the unscrupulous seller to offer aparently good qualities at prices with which honest dealers cannot compete.—A. J. Pieters, Dept. of Agriculture.

Vegetable Forcing.

LETTUCE.

The season for indoor lettuce will soon be in full swing and preparations should already be under way to meet the demand. Attention should be paid to keeping the plants growing freely and successional sowings should be made as required, this, of course, being regulated by the demand or the space at command.

Time is gained and the returns considerably increased by systematic preparation of the plants, so that as soon as one crop is cut good-sized plants are ready to take the place. In this way at least four crops can be matured in the one season, as the plants need not occupy the benches longer than six weeks. It does not pay to keep the benches waiting for the plants to attain sufficient size before they can be filled. For the bringing on of the plants I prefer to use flats. They can be pricked over into a bench, successfully grown on and transplanted when large enough, but in the flats they are easier handled, the soil dries out better and if the space where they are standing is required they can easily be removed wherever desired.

In sowing the seed it is best to sow rather thinly, so that the plants will be a nice size for handling before they be-begin to get crowded. It is, however, essential that the grower be sure of the germinating qualities of his seed, so that he will know just how thick to sow. It is of the utmost importance that the seed be fresh. Though lettuce seed will retain its germ for three or four years, old seed comes away slowly and weakly plants are produced. These weak plants take much longer to get under way and need considerable coaxing to get them into a healthy, free growing state. So, if old seed is in stock, for all that it costs to procure new, it is poor policy to use it. We hear a good deal about seedsmen mixing the old and new seed. It may be practiced in some cases, but having had some connection with the seed business at one time, I know for a fact that no reliable, established firm would stake its reputation and run the risk of losing trade by stooping to such tactics and that such firms put themselves to a good deal of expense and trouble to insure the quality and reliability of the stock they handle. Cheap seed is dear at any price and I would warn every buyer to beware of the bargain counter article.

After the plants are large enough to handle they should be pricked over, being placed about two inches apart each way. The soil used should be of a free, friable nature, and only moderately enriched with well rotted manure. If too much manure is used the plants will not take so kindly to it and heavy soil dries out too slowly to promote free root action. Water rather sparingly to keep rather on the dry side at first, but increase the supply as the plants attain sufficient size to absorb it. Care must always be exercised that an over-supply of water is not given to avoid souring of the soil and insure quick growth and healthy plants.

Regarding temperature, although the seed may be started at a rather higher figure than is suitable for the after growth, as soon as the little plants are up they should be removed to a temperature not exceeding 45 degrees at night or 65 degrees by day. Under such conditions they will grow faster and make much nicer plants than if grown at a higher temperature. W. S. Croydon.

TORONTO.

Trade during the last week has been good, demand far exceeding supply in nearly all lines. Chrysanthemums are coming in slowly in comparison to the demand but we expect by the end of the present week the supply will be up to, if not exceeding, the demand, as there is apparently a big supply of chrysanthemums in this section. Carnations are very tardy; while stock is good, supply is very limited. Roses are showing up better and, with the advent of a few nice warm days, the supply has increased so as to leave no shortage in that line.

Retail men without exception say that business is equal to and in many cases exceeds last year, notwithstanding the fact that our federal elections are warming up to fever heat and this usually has considerable effect on all class of trade.

A LITTLE KNOWN ROSE.

Though but little known, the rose Souvenir de Philemon Cochet is certainly a very attractive variety of Rosa rugosa, not a cross between this species and some other kind as Madame Georges Bruant and Mrs. Anthony Waterer are, for neither of these two last has the characteristic leafage of the true Rosa rugosa, which constitutes much of its charm, such, for instance, as that borne by the pure white semi-double flowered variety, Blanche Double de Coubert. From this last the variety Souvenir de Philemon Cochet differs in the flowers being of an ivory white rather than a pure white tint, while they are also much more double, indeed, the duplex character is more pronounced in the case of this variety than in any other true rugosa that the writer is acquainted with. Despite the fact that Rosa rugosa and its forms are now well known, their merits, I think, are scarcely enough recognized, for they are all of good, sturdy habit, forming neat specimens without any trouble, and flower for a long time, while their foliage throughout the season and their fruits in the autumn are second to no other rose. Added to this they thrive even in smoky districts, where many varieties fail. Such, in short, are the points in favor of Rosa rugosa, whose sturdy habit and formidable spines render it an effective hedge plant. Seedlings, especially of the single kinds, are readily raised.—Gardeners' Magazine.

BITTER-ROT OF APPLES.

The bitter-rot or ripe-rot of apples, sometimes called anthracnose, is a disease well known wherever the apple is cultivated, and the fungus which produces it has probably been known since 1854. The damage caused by bitter-rot in America is very great. In 1900 it was estimated that the loss in four counties of Illinois was $1,500,000. The president of the National Apple Shippers' Association estimated the damage to the apple crop in the United States in 1900 from bitter-rot alone to be $10,000,000. "One of the best methods for combating the disease will consist, during the winter, in carefully cutting out all cankers which should be burned at once. All diseased apples on the ground or on the tree should be collected and destroyed. As a further precaution, trees should be sprayed with standard Bordeaux mixture at least once before the buds open, and again frequently from midsummer until the fruit is almost ripe."—Gardeners' Chronicle.

BUFFALO.

Various Matters of Interest.

Last week was the very reverse of what the poets say we should expect in this lovely month of October. It was dark, gloomy, sloppy and chilly and business was of the same complexion. But a great change has occurred and business awoke with the bright sun. Of course, it is all mums, and welcome they were. Kalb, Midge and Polly Rose give us all the white we want and Halliday and Omega are at their best. Glory of Pacific has to do for pink, but there is room for a good early bright pink. Speaking of chrysanthemums, we called on William Ehmann, of Corfu, a few days ago and found he had 25,000 mums looking very fine. All the leading commercial varieties are represented. A fine bed of Golden Wedding, free from mildew and rust, promises great things. Nothing like it, when it can be grown right. Harry Fishel, once a carnation man, is so in love with chrysanthemums that he has planted all four of his houses with them and is going into the rooted cutting business. D. J. Scott has a bench 7x125 entirely filled with the newer varieties. He must have his eye on the Meldrum show, and from stoutness of stem and size and substance of foliage there are likely to be some large flowers. Charles Phelps has rented the houses of Mrs. Tyrrell lately vacated by Leroy Adams.

Last week we lost one of our oldest florists, James Milley, of Masten street. Mr. Milley was 70 years of age. Born in England, he came to this country forty-two years ago. For some years he had charge of the beautiful grounds, greenhouses and graperies of Myron P. Bush on our glorious Delaware avenue. This place was for years famous for the superb order in which Mr. Milley kept both grounds and houses, but this model place, like so many established in Buffalo's early days, has passed away. Twenty-five years ago Mr. Milley bought vacant property on Masten street and erected five substantial houses, which, with the assistance of his sons, Wm. B. and John Milley, have been devoted to cut flowers in winter and market plants in spring. John Milley is at present with S. N. Pentecost, of Cleveland. One by one the old landmarks pass away, as it was in the beginning and ever shall be.

For several weeks I have quite forgotten to mention that on September 28 there entered into holy matrimony David J. Scott and Edith Brown. As the writer was present, I heard them promise each other all sorts of things and I really believe they will be kept better than the average. The chief mourners present were the parents and grandparents, brothers, sisters, aunts and cousins of the martyrs. A carriage ride of eleven miles on a dark road was undertaken to escape rice and hideous noise from the village youth, and now all is peace and bliss, and may it ever remain so. W. S.

DES MOINES, IA.

There has been very little glass added this season. Most of the growers are only repairing what they have. J. F. Marshall has torn down one house and replaced it with a larger and more substantial one, using Garland gutters and iron posts. His carnations are in extra fine shape.

Peter Lambert left on October 18 for St. Louis and the World's Fair, and from there goes to Germany with his youngest son, Frank, who is to remain two or three years to finish his education in the old world. The elder Lambert will visit his brother and return in a couple of months.

The parks are looking fine in their autumn attire. The hard maple is the finest coloring we ever saw. A new greenhouse is being built at Union park, thus giving them more room to grow for the entire park system of the city.

Mums are in, but of poor quality, being cut before they are ripe.

There is some talk of organizing a bowling team and practicing this winter, but as yet we are not in shape to report our score. J. F. D. F.

The First Steps!

"I have several times been consulted by those who would make a beginning in the Florists' business. In each case I have said that the first step is to subscribe for a Trade Paper, and the next to procure a copy of The Florists' Manual."

Pres. Park Floral Co., Denver, Colo.

WITH MICHIGAN GROWERS.

During the past week I spent a few days in Michigan, visiting some of the greenhouse plants there, and was greatly impressed with the number of houses, also the general appearance of prosperity that was plainly in evidence.

On the way I stopped at Toledo and visited Geo. Bayer's plant, and a very good one it is. His houses, which are 750 feet long, are well worth seeing. Miss Winters, who has charge of the growing, also the retail trade, is one of the few lady growers in this country and the neatness and general excellent quality of the stock grown shows how well she has everything in hand. Chrysanthemums and carnations are the main crop grown. The mums are followed by lettuce and that by tomatoes, making a succession of very paying crops.

At Grand Rapids there are greenhouses and more greenhouses, many of which are used for growing lettuce. We are all acquainted with Geo. F. Crabb. I visited both of his plants and his prospects are good for a very prosperous year. At his new place he has been handicapped by difficulty in procuring glass, so planting was delayed and stock is backward in consequence, but it is on the move now. At his down-town place some very good stock was being cut.

The Grand Rapids Violet Co. has an excellent plant and their Beauties would be hard to beat. They also grow a great many mums, which are rapidly developing.

The Wealthy Avenue Floral Co. grows mostly for the retail trade. Their houses contain an assortment of stock, all in very nice shape.

Henry Smith took me out to his place in the country. Besides the greenhouse business he is largely interested in the growing of fruit. He has a large number of greenhouses and the stock is all looking good, and well advanced. There is a considerable variety of stock grown to supply this retail store, which I am told does the largest business in the city.

Chas. Chadwick is situated pretty far in the country but is well located for the growing business. He has a very good sized plant and is now going largely into the growing of roses, especially Beauty, also carnations and chrysanthemums. He was installing a large 150 horse-power boiler. His prospects for the season are fine and care will produce some fine stock. His new retail store is very nicely fitted up and doing a good business.

I was very sorry that I could not visit the Park Floral Co., also Eli Cross. The former firm is growing a large number of mums and they are of fine quality. After the mums are cut out lettuce takes the place.

Kalamazoo, besides its fame for celery, also boasts some first rate greenhouse plants. Samuel Batson is the proprietor of a very neat plant devoted to carnations mainly, which showed great care and ability. Baby primrose is also grown here in fine shape. Mr. Batson kindly escorted me to the other plants about the city.

At the Central Michigan Nursery Co. plant Mr. Smith, who is in charge, showed us about. A general line of stock is grown and was doing nicely. Mr. Cook is in charge at the retail store.

G. Van Bochove & Bro. have a large range of glass and the stock is in fine shape. Every plant is clean and healthy and showed the skill and care of those in charge. This firm does a very large retail business besides a good wholesale trade.

A firm that has just erected a range of glass is Grofvert & De Smith. They grow carnations almost exclusively and were the best that I saw anywhere. Mr. Grofvert, who is the grower, is a young man and with his ability as a grower, which shows in his stock, he has a great future before him. C. J. O.

MISHAWAKA, IND.—C. L. Powell is building a greenhouse 22x32 and sixteen feet to the ridge.

TOLEDO, O.—Recent visitors were Wm. Dilger, Detroit, and Herman Kenope, foreman at Breitmeyer's, Mt. Clemens.

Southern California is the land of the rose. On another page of this issue is shown plants of Gold of Ophir photographed at South Pasadena.

The Market.

September rains still continue and our unusual climatic conditions have knocked the retail florists' business into a cocked hat. Chrysanthemums are being offered in enormous quantities at almost any price. If the weather were more favorable there would be a possibility that the stores could handle a fair per cent of the flowers offered. Major Bonnaffon as fine as it is possible to imagine them can be had as low as $2 per hundred and good whites at half that price. For smaller flowers it is useless to give quotations, as they do not bring any more than the florist feels like offering. These prices, of course, are for outdoor stock, and growers who had the misfortune not to have had any extra early stock, but are harvesting their blooms now, will not be able to get remunerative prices. During the past week I have inspected over a dozen of the largest growing establishments and the crops are in the pink of condition.

With carnations we have an abundance and, although the stems are rather short, the flowers are good. Prices have declined somewhat. Enchantress is being offered in fair quantity, and it is one of the best sellers.

There is a momentary lull in the demand for roses. We have quantities of Brides and Maids offered and unless the quality is extra they can be had at the buyer's price. Lilium longiflorum costs the stores $1.50 per dozen, and although the stems are rather weak, the flowers are good. Late blooming amaryllis and tuberoses help to make up a variety, and valley remains in fair supply and fair demand.

Regarding business, funeral orders are not as lively as they were a week ago, but we have an occasional wedding decoration to console us. The prospects are good for the fall trade if the clerk of the weather can arrange so that we will have a few days' sunshine.

Various Notes.

N. Synacopulos, the well-known Oakland florist, has placed his store in the hands of his nephew and will devote his time to the decorations of the cars of the Pullman Co., the contract for the taking care of which he has for the coming season.

P. J. McDonnell, of Alden, is cutting some extra fine Estelle at present. G.

A PECULIAR SEASON.

The unusual rains in the vicinity of San Francisco for the past two weeks have changed our season somewhat. Narcissi are almost ready to bloom and daffodil bulbs have made quantities of roots. This is not alone due to the rainfall, but to the unusually warm weather that followed it. If we were sure of an absence of frost for two months to come it would be possible to harvest our crop of narcissi and early daffodils without any loss. But seasons such as we are having at present are usually followed by heavy frost and dry northeast winds and I have seen many acres of bulbs completely destroyed because they were started growing too early in the winter season, either by rainfall or artificial watering.

A new but probably short lease of life has been offered our outdoor stock such as gaillardias, coreopsis, dahlias and cosmos and we are cutting better flowers than I ever remember seeing at this time of year in California.

With hard-wooded nursery stock the effect was much the same, although I do not consider these unusual late rains of any value. Roses have commenced to make a soft growth such as we see in the early spring and when our season arrives for transplanting them, considerable pruning will be necessary to keep them in a hardy, dormant condition. I have seen dozens of cherry and plum trees in bloom and this is nothing in their favor, as our heavy frosts of November, December and January are bound to cut them badly.

We have a habit in California of whitewashing our greenhouse glass generally about the first of May, and as we usually have no rain until the following November we allow the wash to remain the entire summer. But several of our largest growers have had to re-whitewash half a dozen times within the past month, as stock that has been grown in shaded houses will not stand the fiery sun's rays that have been visited upon us between our September and October showers.

Although not strictly in the line of the florists and nurserymen I might mention that many thousands of dollars' worth of damage has been done to the raisin, prune and other dried-fruit industries, to say nothing about the hundreds of tons of wheat still in the fields.

Although in the parlance of the grower this makes what is termed a "long season," I have not noticed that such seasons are always desirable, as the California public from time immemorial do not begin to place their orders with the growers much before the first of December and we are liable to have a few weeks of dry spell during that month to make up for the superabundance of rain now. However, a little extra water is preferable to not quite enough, and we may have a record-breaking season after all. G.

Sioux City, Ia.—J. C. Rennison has just completed what he believes to be the largest greenhouse in this part of the state. It is 35x248.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

For so early in the season business may be considered quite active; at any rate it is not always an easy task to procure the necessary stock to fill orders, our home supply being especially short. Carnations are unusually scarce, for some unknown reason. The growers lost a good many plants from stem-rot, as it was such a wet, cold season, and had to have plants shipped in to fill the houses. It will take these growers some time to get their stock into bloom, which in part accounts for the light supply at present. The market now is $1.50 to $2.50 per hundred, Enchantress bringing the latter figure. Roses are bringing from $1 to $6 per hundred. Chrysanthemums are now available and find ready sale.

H. Merritt, at Irondoquoit, has had a good cut of carnations this fall, his Enchantress being especially good. H. E. Wilson takes his entire cut.

N. James reports business good, especially funeral work. His carnations are in fine shape and give promise of excellent crops. M.

Kenosha, Wis.— H. D. Kamp has gone out of the florists' business and removed to Buffalo.

I want to renew my subscription for the best florists' paper published.—R. L. Burgoyne, Danville, Ill.

Davenport, Ia.—Otto Klingbiel has given a trust deed to Rose Woltmann, covering all his property, for the benefit of creditors. The liabilities are said to aggregate $5,854.

Wellington, O.—T. G. Yale says trade was good all spring and summer up to August; then it was dull until the first of October, when it began to pick up again. Carnations and mums are fine.

WEST GROVE, PA.

Had Mr. Conner and Phil, when they came out from Philadelphia recently, had a little more time they would have found three establishments each of about 7,000 feet of glass, where cut flowers and plants are grown well enough to be interesting.

Benjamin Connell grows ferns in quantity and with great success; also violets and carnations for cut flowers.

Roney Bros. grow bedding plants and carnations, their red seedling carnation, an improved Portia, being especially interesting. They also have a house of tomatoes, an improved Lorillard.

J. Morris Cooper is an extensive grower of mushrooms, but has considerable glass in carnations, three-fourths of his glass being devoted to his new scarlet seedling not yet disseminated but very promising. G. R.

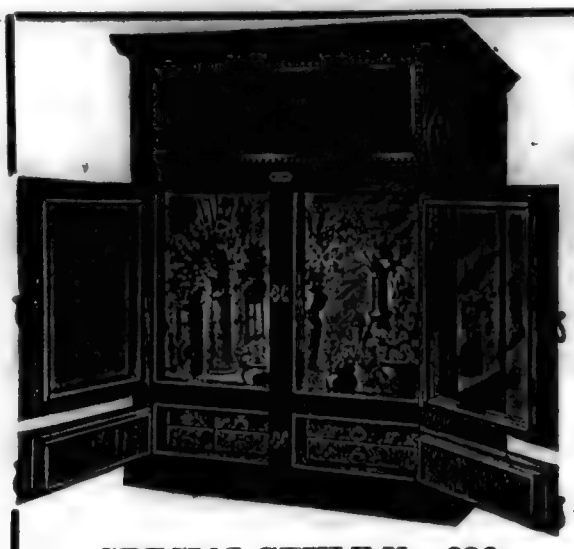
CADILLAC, MICH.

An illustrated edition of the Cadillac News and Express gives a sketch and portrait of A. W. Tweedie and a sketch of the brief career of Kleinhans & Mason, with a picture of their new place. The members of this firm came to Cadillac from Ithaca only last May. They have put up 4,500 feet of glass, a residence and an office. They have heating facilities for more glass, which they expect to put up next spring. At present they have to send out of town for roses and a large part of their other stock.

A. W. Tweedie has been in business five years and has a well-kept place. Besides a large business in cut flowers and plants he does a nice trade in shrubs and other hardy stock, a profitable feature that many florists overlook.

Springfield, Mass.—Osterman & Steele have opened a new flower store at 137 State street.

Colorado Springs, Colo.—William Henry Evans proposes to add largely to his glass area early next spring.



Youngstown, O.—Joseph Shaefer died of heart failure October 13. He was 77 years of age. His greenhouses were a well known source of supply for bedding stock, etc.

Please discontinue my smilax advertisement; plants all sold. Cost of advertising, 2 cents for each $1.50 of sales. Who said the classified advs. in the Review don't pay? It could only be the one who never tried them.—Harvey B. Snow.

TO-BAK-INE PRODUCTS THEY KILL BUGS

The great popularity of TO-BAK-INE FUMIGATING PAPER, TO-BAK-INE LIQUID and TO-BAK-INE FUMIGATING POWDER has resulted in a call for a Fourth Product described below:

TO-BAK-INE DUSTING POWDER

This is for Sprinkling or Dusting Purposes only and will not burn for fumigation. This DUSTING POWDER differs from any other on the market in being FREE FROM ANY TOBACCO OR TOBACCO ODOR and in ALWAYS CONTAINING A DEFINITE AMOUNT of FREE PURE NICOTINE, which is added to a specially prepared powder. The nicotine being in a free form, is gradually given off, killing all insects on flowers, plants and vegetables, leaving a perfectly ODORLESS POWDER OR RESIDUE, which is readily shaken or washed off, and SHOULD any remain it will NOT DECAY or ROT, thus differing from tobacco dust, etc. The advantage of this Powder should strongly appeal to Greenhouse Vegetable Growers, whose products must be free from foreign or objectionable tastes.

50-POUND BAG, $1.50; 100-POUND BAG, $3 00 Send for our Booklet, "WORDS OF WISDOM," by leading Growers, containing full directions as to exterminating all greenhouse pests.

A GOOD FERTILIZER.

The stems and stocks of tobacco which are waste products in manufactures are rich in potash. They contain from six to seven per cent of potash and about two per cent nitrogen, with about one-half of one per cent of phosphoric acid. It thus could really be termed a complete fertilizer in itself. For best results the stems should be finely ground before application. H. J. Patterson.

NERINES.

This is one of the most beautiful greenhouse bulbs we have. It is quite easy to grow, and anyone with a cool house ought not to be without it. It is quite distinct from the amaryllis, and quite the reverse in its growth, as it makes its growth in winter. The bulbs can be purchased in August just as the flower-spike is about to appear. These should be potted in a nice open compost, two parts good loam, one of leaf soil, and a dash of sand. They are bulbs that do not require to be potted very often, for the less they are disturbed the better they like it. After they have done flowering and if they are making plenty of growth they should be frequently watered with manure water so as to get a good strong bulb for the following year. By the end of April or early in May the foliage will begin to turn yellow, which is a sign they are going to rest, and water should be gradually withheld. After the foliage has all died down, they should be stood in a cold frame in the full sun so as to ensure a good ripening. They are propagated by offsets, and these should be grown on under the same treatment as established bulbs, or they can be grown from seed, but this, of course, is a long process, as in most cases with bulbs. Some of the best species are N. Fothergilli, N. sarniensis, N. sarniensis corusca, N. Plantii, and N. rosea. A lot has been done of late years to bring them to the front by hybridizing, and these in many cases surpass the species both in size and color. Some of the best are Countess Bathurst, Lady Lawrence, Lady Lucy Hicks-Beach, Lady Mary Shelley, and Miss Wilmott. Nerines last in bloom a long time and are very useful for decorative purposes; and without a doubt they are one of the best classes of the South African bulbs.—Gardeners' World.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

There is not a great deal of life in business, but a great deal of stock is being disposed of. Prices, even on the best grade of stock, are not as high as growers would like to see them. We have had several slight frosts but a heavy one is what we need to put business on a good footing.

Chrysanthemums now hold the boards and all other flowers have to take a back seat, more or less. There are very few orders for mums now that cannot be filled and there are some varieties that have to be pushed pretty hard to make them move. Pink, white and yellow varieties are now to be had, but as yet nothing in the fancy varieties is coming in.

Roses are coming very nicely. The percentage of good stock is much larger. There is not so much mildew and the general appearance is much better. Beauties are in larger supply and of better quality. Some very good Perles are coming, which sell well in this market. Carnations, too, are increasing in quantity and improving in quality. A few dahlias and gladioli are still seen, also cosmos.

Violets are a glut and have to be moved for almost nothing to get rid of them. It is still too early for this flower to do well in this market. Harrisii, callas and valley are in moderate supply and sell well.

Various Notes.

The committee in charge of the trip to the E. G. Hill plant at Richmond report October 27 as the day selected. Mr. Hill writes that the mums will be just right then. A good crowd is expected to go via the C. C. & T. R. R., leaving at 7:55 a. m. This is over the new road to Richmond, and besides giving those who go a chance to see another part of Indiana it gives a longer time in Richmond. As it requires ten in the party to procure reduced rates we want all who possibly can to go with us. The trip will surely be worth while.

J. A. Peterson is disposing of a lot of plants and palms at auction with considerable success.

Chas. Jones and Mr. Brooks are making preparations to open a retail store in Avondale. This is a very thriving suburb and already has two stores that are doing good business.

Mrs. Sherman Thomas, of Fort Thomas, has gone to Kansas City to visit her parents.

E. E. Hall, of Clyde, O., is with W. K. Partridge, of Lockland.

C. J. Ohmer.

KIND WORDS NEVER DIE.

We consider them the best on the market. We have 260 lbs in use.—Good & Reese Co., Springfield, O.

We have found them first-class, the best we ever used for glazing.—E. G. Hill Co., Richmond, Ind.

I have used all the different kinds of points on the market. I consider yours the most reliable, handy, easy to drive, easy to extract.—Chas. Scrim, Ottawa, Canada.

I must say your Zinc Points have given great satisfaction. I have over 125 lbs. on my houses, and feel justified in stating they are the best point on the market.—W. K. Partridge, Lockland, O.

In our 25 years' experience with glazing points of all kinds, your Zinc Points are the best to date.—Grant-Wilson Floral Co., Cleveland, O.

We think they are the best things we have ever used to hold glass on greenhouses.—W. A. Hammond, Richmond, Va.

They have outlasted all others used, therefore are better and cheaper.—Theo. F. Beckert, Glenfield, Pa.

The first lot we had from you two years ago are still holding their own, and intend to do so for years to come. They are "fine as silk."—Buts Brothers, New Castle, Pa.

We never used anything for the purpose that has given such good satisfaction.—Phoenix Nursery Co., Bloomington, Ill.

I can truthfully say your Zinc Points are the best I ever used. They are easily driven and withdrawn and are stiff. Being straight on one side, they can be driven accurately; consequently the breakage of glass is very small. I have some in use four years, and they are still in place as good as new.—W. S. Are all flower growers liars?

SURELY this cannot be true; well, we have over 100 growers who have written us, a large majority without request, their opinions; we publish a few of these letters in the columns of this paper; see on pages 1088-89-98-1100, what they say about the FUMIGATING KIND TOBACCO POWDER. All began with a five-pound trial bag at our expense, which gave them an opportunity without cost to prove its GOODNESS and our assertion that it was the most effective, cleanest and quickest, as well as cheapest (10 cents per 100-foot house) article to fumigate with, and that all kinds of aphis can be killed in one night. Let us send you a five-pound trial bag by express, it will cost you nothing but the express charges on it, and be convinced that what your brother growers say of it is true. Our booklet tells of it; we mail it on request.

CAPACITY OF BOILER.

I have a horizontal return tubular boiler for steam. It is ten feet long, forty-two inches wide and contains thirty-seven 3-inch tubes, with grate surface 42x48. We burn slack coal. How many 1-inch pipes 175 feet long should it heat? How large should the main be where it leaves the boiler? How large the return where it enters?

J. M. K.

The boiler described, if properly set and provided with good draught, should, when working to full capacity, supply steam for 2,500 square feet of radiation. To provide this a 4-inch riser will be required. The boiler should therefore be tapped for 4-inch pipe. The return, if made 2-inch, will be ample, although it is usual to find a 3-inch flange on the return if the flow is 4-inch. To get 2,560 feet of radiation would require 7,400 feet of 1-inch pipe. If long risers and returns are necessary the area of radiation in these should be computed and deducted from the 2,500 and the number of linear feet of 1-inch pipe computed on the basis of the radiation remaining after deducting the area in the flows and returns from the 2,560. If the risers and returns are short forty-two 1-inch pipes 175 feet long can be cared for by the boiler. This is computed on the assumption that steam under five pounds pressure is to be used.

Superior Boilers Are Good Boilers.

Read what our customers say about them:

South Bend, Ind., April 4, 1904.

"Superior to any Hot Water Boiler we have ever used. You certainly have placed the right name to your Boilers; no effort at all to keep the temperature at desired points when zero weather comes. Night after night the past severe winter weather gave your Boiler a good test. We are more than pleased with the Superior Boiler." Yours truly, Treanor & Rettig.

A VIEW IN ONE CORNER OF THE FLOWER GROWERS' MARKET, 58-60 WABASH AVE., CHICAGO.
(OTHER VIEWS WILL BE SHOWN IN LATER ISSUES.)

THE MODERN way calls for the fewest possible handlings of cut flowers, and it was to provide a place where producers and buyers might get together in closest touch that the Flower Growers' Company, Chicago, was incorporated in 1902 and the present Market opened. Did you ever visit it? It's worth your while to do so; doubly worth your while if you are either a grower or a buyer.

Here are assembled each morning some forty large growers of cut flowers and plants (or their representatives) with their stocks, in the aggregate very much more than comes into any other wholesale establishment in the west.

And there the buyers come in crowds; the Market is the first morning stop of nine out of every ten city buyers, not because of the great variety of stock offered, though it embraces everything to be had anywhere else and many things not to be had elsewhere; not because of the assured freshness of the stock, all sold out clean each day; not because of lower prices, for current Chicago rates, closely regulated by supply and demand, must necessarily govern; but because here, and here only, the buyer meets the producer face to face, where each comes to know the other, to understand, one what the other needs, the other at which stand those needs can best be supplied.

Here the producer finds that unless the retailer is treated well and always given stock on which he can make a profit there can be no permanent prosperity. And here, too, the buyer learns to tie to the producer on whose stock he can depend.

THE PRESENT STAND-HOLDERS IN THE MARKET ARE:

BEGINNINGS IN DESIGN...

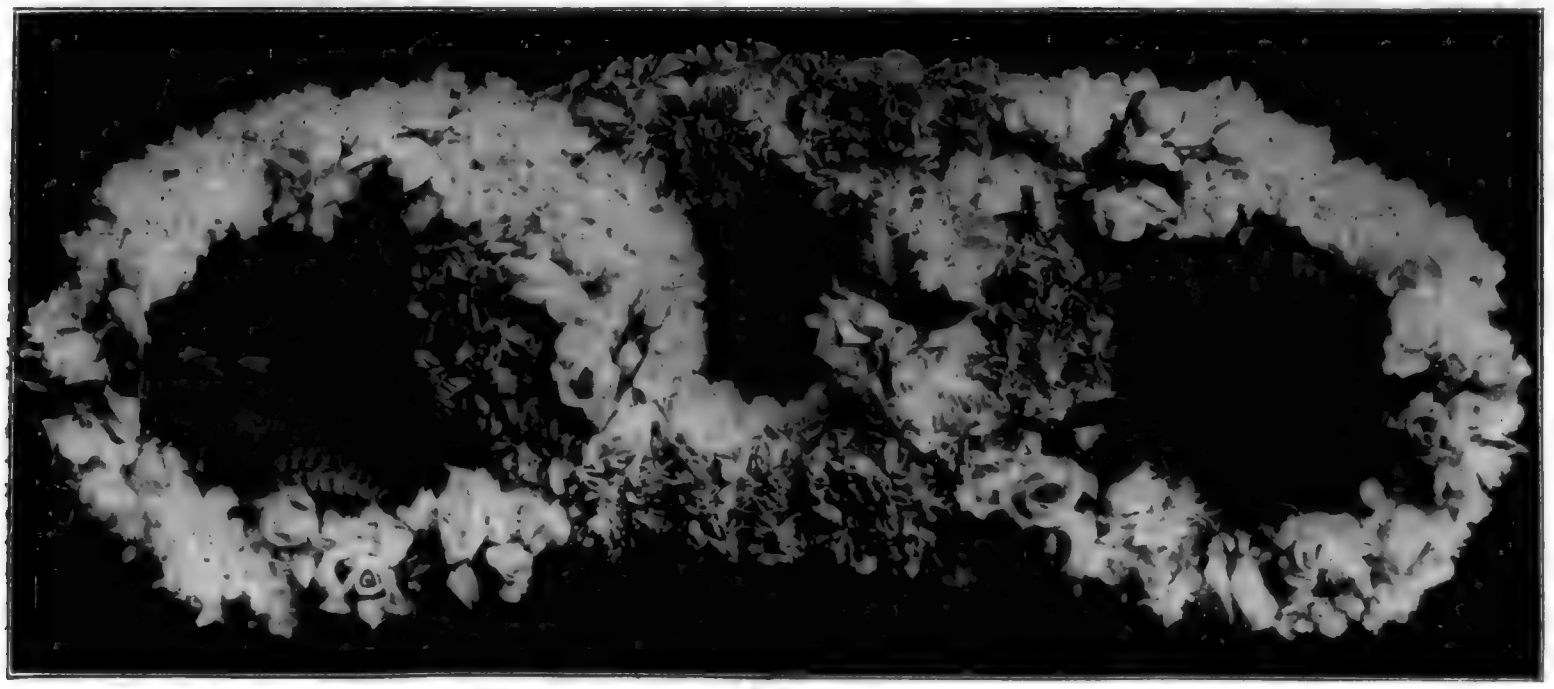
THE THREE LINKS.

A Simple But Difficult Design.

The design here presented is simple enough in plan, but not so easy of execution. It is necessarily made on a thin frame, if on a frame at all, and, with many stems crowded into this limited space, it is difficult to finish the surface smoothly and regularly. With this end in view, stem the carnations quite short and pay particular attention to the wrapping. Have a bunch of wire cut about an inch longer than is usually required and give them a longer as well as a tighter wrapping. In filling this narrow outline frame much of the workers comfort depends upon how tightly the sphagnum is packed in. There is more danger of its being too tight than too loose. The best test is to fill one link with sphagnum and then insert the flowers for a short distance on the top and two sides and see how they hold. If they hold firmly enough, or whether it requires too hard work to insert them or whether the calyxes or picks break in your attempt at inserting. With a few practice trials of this kind you will soon be able to judge in advance as to how hard your moss filling should be to meet the peculiar needs of each design.

Filling the Frame.

The middle link of this Odd Fellows' design is filled on top and on both inside and outside edges. In this case it is made of Joost carnations. The two end links are of white carnations filled on top and on the outside edge of the frame. The inside edge is covered with wood ferns, not the whole frond, but sections cut, each having its own stem and two opposite leaflets. They are just wide enough to line the inside edge of the frame if inserted lengthwise two or three deep. Some of them are strong enough in the stem to be inserted without picks. Many times in other places flowers and foliage are strong enough and sharp enough to be pushed into the sphagnum without stemming. Clear the lower end of the stem of spines, foliage, or branches, and insert quickly and firmly. Well-grown chrysanthemums, roses, carnations, well-matured fern fronds, either kind of asparagus, and many stems of woody structure will stand alone in the moss. Often the only hindrance is the blunt stem end. A single shave with a sharp knife will sharpen them sufficiently for this purpose.



The coloring in this piece is what keeps the links distinct. The more striking the contrast, the more decidedly will the design be developed. Watch the carrying of the color carefully where the links cut each other. The center link should be cut twice by the intersecting links, and each of the others but once.

Trimming the Links.

The peculiarity of trimming in this design is the series of rosettes upon the top edges of the two extreme links. Stem on one pick two or three pink or white roses, in length from one to four inches, with a suggestion of foliage. Insert so that the cluster lies flat on the carnation background. Insert a similar cluster in the opposite direction, joining immediately upon the stem end of the first. See that sufficient space is left between the rosettes so that they will not run one into another. Watch that the roses which have decidedly curved stems lie on the curved parts of the link, thus falling in line harmoniously without breaking the outline of the design. On account of the heavier appearance of the center link the rosette trimming is kept on the outside links only, the purpose being to preserve the balance.

Another good way of making links is to construct a solid panel, preferably rectangular or oval in shape, of any suitable background material and trace the links in the center with either a single or double line of carnations or other similar flowers, as the case may require. Then whatever trimming is used should be kept well away from the links and be in light lines and contrasting colors.

Other color combinations for the design herewith illustrated: One crimson, one light pink, one white link, the colors arranged in the order named: yellow, green and white; purple, light pink or lavender and white. GERTRUDE BLAIR.

The Three Links of the Odd Fellows, Middle Link Pink Carnations, Ends White.

OUTSIDE COMPETITION.

There are a great many retail florists who think the latania is a thing of the past. They say that of all palms it is the slowest seller and they refuse to buy even at prices which are below the cost of production to the growers. The result is that in a number of big ranges of glass where the latania once flourished it is seen no more, the space being given to kentias and arecas. But the idea that the latania cannot be sold is a mistake. There is a greater demand for them than can be supplied. The department stores all over the country are looking for 4 and 5-inch latanias. They will pay a better price than the florist will—often he won't buy at any price—and will sell thousands, sometimes at cost, for an advertisement, but usually at a profit of fifteen to twenty per cent. Of course these special sales are not always to the liking of the florist in the vicinity—though he can usually duplicate the stock and the prices if he will—but no more does he like the department store's Saturday special sale of cut flowers. Some of the department stores are using immense quantities of cut flowers for special sales. They usually refuse to pay over $15 per thousand for roses or $10 for carnations. The florist can get these prices on thousand lots whenever the department store can. Spend a few dollars in advertising in the local newspaper and the terrors of department store competition will vanish.

CARNATION NOTES.—EAST.

Mulching.

The question of mulching at this time of year depends upon circumstances, or, rather, conditions decide whether or not it is advisable this early to mulch at all. If the soil was of proper quality at the time of filling the bench and careful cultivation, watering, etc., kept up since, there is not need of much fertilizer, as comparatively little food elements have been taken up by the plants.

It is well to remember that field-grown plants in the vigor of health have much energy stored up within and in their efforts to become established in their new quarters draw upon this stored energy. This is obvious when it is considered that in lifting the delicate feeding roots are disarranged or broken off and rendered useless for the time being. This time varies in the different varieties and must be considered in catering to the needs of each.

From the fact that little food is required by the plants during the period of reëstablishment, it has seemed advisable to add to the bench soil at the start but a small quantity of bone meal, applying later at intervals in such amounts as are needed, thus making it possible also to give each variety the special attention its peculiarities demand. Then, too, a mulch tends to prevent air from entering the soil and the sun from playing on the surface. We need all the sun possible at this time and as the days grow short, so the amount of sunlight grows less.

So, then, instead of mulches, I would advise light top dressings of a mixture of soil and bone, occasionally substituting hardwood ashes for the bone.

In the case of stock grown under glass all summer the method of proceeding would be different, but will treat of this later.

Geo. S. Osborn.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Variety the Condiment.

We are now in the first flush of the glorious chrysanthemum season and will revel in it, in all its varied forms, for another month, and then will come dark weather and roses and carnations will assert themselves. And there are others. Variety is the spice of life. This is true intellectually as well as in the grosser needs of men, and so it is in flowers, for those who can constantly enjoy the luxury of their presence. The wonder is that our patrons are satisfied with the meager variety that is offered.

Paper White Narcissus.

If there is any money in this pretty flower at any time it most assuredly is at the holiday season. There are times when we can get along without it, but at Christmas it is invaluable. I mention this now so that the Christmas crop can be brought into the houses at once. You can force out this early flowering bulb in a short time in a strong heat, but that is not the way to do it. Give it seven or eight weeks in a night temperature of 50 to 55 degrees and the flowers will be larger, the stem stouter and the stock in every way of better quality than those forced in a higher temperature in half the time.

Don't think that down on the ground alongside the paths is good enough for the narcissus. It must have the fullest light, and it's worth it, and if all the flowers are fully out a few days before they are cut, so much the better, for the flats can be removed to a very cool house to their advantage. With a poor light these bulbs seem to grow all to leaves, with small flowers. In the fullest light the opposite is the case.

Roman Hyacinths.

We usually commence cutting Romans by the middle of November. Very early forcing requires a strong heat, but as the season advances less heat is needed. I think for the retailer that Romans pay best to have a few flats in bloom during every week they are available. Yet Christmas, of course, demands an extra lot and these should be given plenty of time, for size, quality and durability of the spikes will be much superior if given light and moderate temperature over those unduly forced. Don't say you can't afford proper bench room for these bulbs, for, considering the short time a crop occupies a bench and the amount of bloom you cut, the space required is very small.

Sweet Peas.

As admitted before this, we failed for years to pick sweet peas before Easter, simply because we allowed bottom growth to spring up and smother the original growth that would have given us flowers at Christmas. In many places the pots of sweet peas will be put on the bench immediately the early mums are removed. Some growers may have sown them where they will flower. In any case keep the strong growth that will start from the lower eyes carefully picked off, also all lateral growth. From the time they are out of the ground until you pick flowers the vine should be encouraged to keep growing straight up, for it is when the vines are allowed to drop over that a stronger growth from the base of the plant is encouraged, as in so many of our other plants.

There is nothing better than a cheap, coarse string for the vines to climb on and 50 degrees at night is high enough, with the fullest light you can give them. Four or five inches of soil is enough and head room of six feet. A deeper soil may keep them longer in bloom, but a succession of crops is better than old vines. Sow again in a week or two, for a February picking.

Gardenias.

It is rather out of season to say anything about that most fragrant flower, the gardenia. It is likely to be the fad this winter in some fashionable communities. You can offer no criticism for admiration of these delicious flowers, a miniature camellia with a delightful odor. I saw some splendidly grown plants a few days ago. They were in 6-inch or 7-inch pots, with their glossy foliage as fresh and green, and perhaps more so, as they could be seen in Florida or Alabama. Cultivation in pots is not what the commercial man would give. Planting out on a well-drained bench in five or six inches of soil is much more satisfactory in every way, with young plants that are planted in the spring.

I remember hearing a florist friend on his return from California tell us that gardenias were well grown and flowered under glass by the florists of San Francisco and the principal point he noticed was that each plant was growing on a little mound; that is, at the stem of the plant the soil might be seven or eight inches deep, sloping away between the plants to three or four inches. There may be a good point in this, as it would keep the roots from becoming saturated or constantly wet, which the necessary frequent syringing of plants would be liable to cause.

More about these lovely shrubs later. Just now they do very well at a night temperature of 60 degrees with a daily thorough syringing. Mealy bug is their worst insect enemy. The buds appear on the ends of the growth and any lateral growth just below the buds should be pinched out. Thousands of these gardenia flowers will be sent north this winter from the southern states, still a home-grown one is worth a dozen for purity and sweetness.

Roses for Pots.

Last fall countless thousands of nursery-grown roses of all descriptions which were to have been dug and put in storage, were frozen in the ground to stay until April's sun thawed them out. About November 16 hard freezing commenced and we all exchanged remarks: "This will only last a few days. Lots of time yet to dig up roses, etc." Nurserymen were hit much more seriously than florists, but we all felt it. It is improbable that we shall soon again see such an early and continuous winter, yet it taught us a lesson.

The longer you can leave the hardy roses in the ground (I allude to the hybrid perpetual and Ramblers) that you intend to force, it is to their benefit. Light frosts ripen their wood, take off all the foliage and put them in that perfectly dormant state in which the disturbance and loss of roots is little felt. With us about November 10 is right. It would have been all right last year, but procrastination is a disastrous element in the make-up of lots of us.

For forcing purposes use one-year-old plants that had their roots shortened back and their growth cut back to one or two eyes and were planted in your own ground last spring and have made four or five canes three or four feet long. Perhaps the majority of florists depend, however, on buying these plants from some good nursery house. If so, ask as a favor that these roses be dug and shipped to you by express the same day. With the hybrid perpetuals a day or two of delay is not so serious, and they recover from a drying out, because in the spring you cut off three-fourths of the growth and leave but a few eyes to break. But with the Ramblers it is of the utmost importance that there should be no delay between digging and potting, for these are not cut back, either in fall or spring, and a heavy growth has to be started by few roots and those not working.

Readers who do me the favor to notice these hints know that I advocate a more expensive but surer way of growing Ramblers for forcing, yet there are thousands lifted from the field and flowered the following spring. With the hybrid perpetual it is the only way for the commercial man.

As soon as dug or received pot without delay. The hybrids planted in the spring and lifted with care, saving every possible root, will want a 6-inch or 7-inch pot. A heavy clay loam, with a fourth of cow manure, not too rotten, will do for all of them. Pot firmly and give them a good soaking.

Storing for Winter.

I forgot to mention that little pruning should be done to the hybrids when lifting them. You may shorten back the canes one-third and with the Ramblers only the unripened tips of the long growths. In an hour or two after watering lay the plants down in rows with the pots on their sides touching. A row five feet wide will do. Then another row of pots, the tops of the plants overlapping the pots of the first row, and so on, making as long a bed as you need.

Choose for this storage bed, as we will call it, a piece of ground that water will not lie on, even in a thaw. After your plants are in place, if some of the tops are unruly and stick up, run a piece of strong twine across the bed here and there to hold them down. Then cover the whole bed, pots and all, with five or six inches of garden soil, or any soil you have at hand. Soil dug from each side of the bed is proper, because that helps drainage. In ordinary seasons, after an inch or so of frost has penetrated the soil covering these roses, a cover of six inches of leaves or stable litter will be all that is needed to keep the soil in the pots from freezing, so at New Year's they can be taken up and removed to a cool house. If there is little snow and much zero cold, then give more covering. This envelope of moist earth will restore shriveled wood and they will come out at New Year's with wood and eyes fresh and plump and in fine condition to gradually start growing.

William Scott.

RECORDS OF CUTS.

Every grower who wishes to keep up with the procession should have a system of record-keeping, so that he may be able at any time and at the end of the season, to tell exactly what each house, variety and grower is producing. By this means he will be certain to arrive at conclusions which should be a guide for the coming season. Not only will this be a true guide in cultural methods, but, if the system is complete, it will include records which will enable him to grow the varieties in the proper quantities which his customers call for, thereby eliminating, or at least reducing the waste to a minimum.

Each house should be supplied with a case into which a card can be inserted to protect it from damp and sunshine. This card should show each day of the month and contain a space for each variety planted in the house. Provision should also be made for showing the morning and evening cuts separately, a copy of which should be handed to the manager immediately after each cut is taken.

In the sorting room similar record-keeping should be in force, so that after grading each house, variety and grower may be credited, according to the merits. The manager will, by a daily comparison of records, be in a position to know nearly what he can expect from each house and by consulting the sheets he will be able to ascertain whether the cut is on the increase or decrease and take orders accordingly.

Careful Handling Essential.

The care of the stock between the time of cutting and shipping is a very important duty and should be entrusted only to qualified help, as many of the "kicks" coming from customers can be traced to the poor methods adopted in keeping stock and to ignorance or carelessness in packing. Having well-trained help in charge of this department enhances the value of the stock, keeps down waste, pleases our customers, and by adding to our reputation gains us new ones.

Neatness and cleanliness in packing, generous count, dispatch, and, above all, a determination to please our customers, will result in adding to the list, forming and cementing a friendship which should ever exist between customer and grower to the advantage of both. Ribes.

TOO MUCH RED SPIDER.

I send some foliage of Liberty for your inspection. Will you please inform me what the trouble is and what I can do to remedy it? These plants have been doing fine up to about the last week in September and the rest of my roses are still all right. J. R. E.

The rose leaves were in too dry a condition when they reached me to allow of a correct diagnosis, but under the microscope they showed undoubted signs of being infested with red spider; in fact, there were more spider eggs enclosed in that envelope than I would care to see in a Meteor house of 3,000 square feet. Keep the syringe going on each side of the bench on every bright day and see that the spray reaches the under side of the leaves, where the spider makes his home. The leaves are of good quality and must have been produced on vigorous, growing plants, but the spider has entirely destroyed their usefulness.

Ribes.

THE WRONG CULTURE.

Will you please tell me why my roses do not hold up better? They wilt too soon after taking out of ice box or cellar and they seem rather small to me, although that is probably owing to hot weather. I planted them in March on raised benches in five inches of soil. The soil was prepared last fall, using two-thirds gumbo and one-third rotted cow manure. Gumbo seemed to me to be the most available, as we have no clay and my soil is a sandy loam. The foliage looks healthy and they have made a good growth, American Beauties trying to climb out of the roof, but the flowers are small. We shaded lightly up to about six weeks ago; since then have had no shade. They had a mulch of rotted cow and horse manure on all summer, but took it off recently. We have used no liquid manure as yet, as the weather has been too hot during the past six weeks. We had thrips on them during most of the summer; then they disappeared for awhile and reappeared about three weeks ago. How can I get rid of them? I have mostly Brides, Gates, Maids and a few Beauties and Kaiserins. I send you a sample of the roses. C. B.

I am always glad to help by advice those brethren who may get into trouble with their roses, and particularly so when the case is stated so explicitly as C. B. has stated his. This simplifies matters and gives me a chance to advise in such a way that some benefit may be derived.

The reason why these blooms are deficient in keeping qualities is because they are grown in too close an atmosphere. This is indicated by the texture of the foliage and by the spongy nature of the calyxes and petals. And under such conditions small, poor keeping blooms are the natural result. This also accounts in a measure for the Beauties having a tendency to climb.

Roses planted from pots never require shading, even during the hottest weather, and any stock so treated is certain to show the effect of it during the winter months by weak growth, a sure index of an impaired constitution. Liquid manure should not be applied to such stock until it has regained a vigorous growth, as any stimulant which acts so quickly as this does is apt to sicken the plants and aggravate the trouble.

True gumbo soil, which I subjected to a searching analysis about two years ago, contains few of the essential elements for successful rose culture and should not be used, even as a mixture, almost any other soil from pasture land being preferable.

It is rather a dangerous proceeding to remove mulching after it has been on for a sufficient time to allow the feeding roots to enter it, as this exposes these very tender members to the sunshine and dry air, under which conditions they are certain to wither and die, thus leaving the plants in a starving condition. Better keep adding to it lightly and frequently.

Try a night temperature of 56 degrees, with plenty of ventilation, giving particular attention to night ventilation, even at the expense of a few extra tons of coal. Keep the air sweet and have the foliage dry before sundown.

Thrips can be kept in subjection by a systematic fumigation, doing it frequently and lightly. Thrips are frequently introduced into the house with the mulch, and are certain to be so introduced if the mulching material has been neglected and allowed to be overrun with weeds during the summer, as such places are their favorite stamping grounds. Ribes.

KEEPING SHOW FLOWERS.

Owing to the fact that flowers will not always open just when they are wanted, and an exhibition on any given date will not be suitable for all varieties alike, as to time of flowering, it is often necessary to put flowers away in cold storage to hold them in perfect condition.

Flowers to keep well should be cut just as soon as they are fully open and before being placed in water every stem should be tied to a bamboo or wire stake, so that there shall be no strain on the neck of the flower. With very stout-stemmed kinds like Appleton this may seem unnecessary, but I believe it always pays, because it keeps the stem straight and allows the water to pass freely up to the flower. Barrels cut down a little are the best thing to set the flowers in and they should be half filled with water.

The best place to store the flowers is a cool, dry cellar with only just a little light and a temperature as near 40 degrees as possible. It is not necessary to change the water oftener than every five or six days, as too frequent handling is apt to bruise the flowers considerably. A few drops of ammonia or a pinch of salt will keep the water from smelling badly.

Flowers treated in this manner will keep in good condition for three weeks or more and, because the stem is soaked full of water, they generally keep in better condition during a show than flowers cut only the day before.

Any flower should be placed in water at least twenty-four hours before it is exhibited and, if the stems are very long, forty-eight hours is better. If this plan were always followed we would not see so many of the long-stemmed classes looking like 30 cents or less the second morning of an exhibition.

Methods of Staging.

There seems to be a disposition in some quarters to regard any method of staging other than the one of six, twelve or more long-stemmed flowers in a vase as a retrogression and a violation of precedent and good taste. While all will recognize the fact that the big vases are spectacular and very effective, the classes calling for 15-inch stems, one flower to a vase, are as attractive to the general public as anything in the show, and they will keep in good condition for a week should the show last so long as that. I think there is lots of room to exhibit both ways, and any other way that may suggest itself to the mind of the show promoters.

Exhibiting.

Exhibiting entails a good deal of work on the exhibitor and the results, even if he is successful, are out of all proportion to the labor involved, but the satisfaction of winning is something that cannot be counted in a mere monetary sense, as every grower knows. Where seven or eight years ago the prominent exhibitors could almost be counted on one's fingers, today they can be counted by the hundred, and the end is not yet, by any means. The desire for a country estate by the wealthy is indirectly responsible for this. As soon as one gets the establishment running, then comes the desire to beat his neighbor in raising something, and one of the first things the gardener turns to is the mum. The result is everywhere seen, and today the quality of the flowers set up at a dozen shows in the east is not surpassed anywhere in the world.

By the time these notes are in print the shows will have begun and culturally there is nothing more to tell, but we will keep a careful record of varieties exhibited and report our impressions later.

EARLY MUMS.

Please give a list of best early chrysanthemums, pink, white and yellow. We have Glory of Pacific, Willowbrook and Parr, but are looking for something better. I do not mean earlier, but ones that will bloom about the same time as the above. S. F. P.

There are three standard yellows that are quite largely grown for early, Monrovia, Omega and October Sunshine. These can be had by October 1. These are all fairly good, the last named being best. Mrs. T. W. Pockett will come in by October 8 and is very fine. The new Merstham Yellow, as exhibited before the C. S. A. committee on October 1, easily discounts either of these kinds, as it is of exhibition size and finish. For some reason a great call developed for early yellows this year and they were very profitable.

Pacific seems the best pink for earliest work, though Lady Harriet and Mrs. Coombes can be cut in grand shape by October 5 to 10. I know of nothing new in early pinks this year.

In whites I would ask nothing better than Alice Byron to come in October 5, following immediately after White Pacific. The white sport of Mrs. Coombes named Daphne will also be very valuable as an early pure white. The new Clementine Touset was shown on October 8 this year and is very large for its earliness in flowering. The color is a pinky white and it is a fine, big early mum.

It should always be borne in mind that to get early flowers and get them big, plants should be set out by May 15 on the benches. It is useless to plant late in June or July and expect fine flowers by October 1, whether the variety is naturally early or not. Brian Boru.

CHRYSANTHEMUM SOCIETY.

The Boston Meeting.

Just as we go to press we are in receipt of a telegram from Secretary Lemon announcing that the annual business meeting of the Chrysanthemum Society of America will be held at Horticultural Hall, Boston, on the afternoon of November 4. The revision of the constitution and the adoption of the new scales for judging will be in order. Address entries to Wm. Nicholson, Framingham, Mass.

Work of the Committees.

There were two varieties before the Chicago committee on October 22. Roi d'Italia, exhibited by the E. G. Hill Co., Richmond, Ind., color yellow, scored commercial scale 89 points. No. 10, exhibited by Nathan Smith & Son, Adrian, Mich., scored 72 points commercial scale.

One variety was before the Cincinnati committee October 22, Pink Queen, exhibited by Nathan Smith & Son, Adrian, Mich., color pink; Japanese incurved; scored commercial scale 89 points.

One variety was before the New York commitee October 22, "a seedling," exhibited by James Carstairs, New Rochelle, N. Y., color French white; Japanese reflexed; scored commercial scale 64 points.

One variety was before the Boston committee for examination on October 15. It was Daphne, exhibited by A. Herrington, Madison, N. J.; color white, Japanese reflexed, scored commercial (new) scale, 86 points. In the opinion of the committee the blooms were not far enough advanced for accurate judgment.

Two varieties were before the Chicago committee October 15, both exhibited by the E. G. Hill Co., Richmond, Ind. Clementine Touset, color white, shape and form on the order of the Queen, scored commercial scale 88 points. Reveil des Belges, color yellow, scored commercial scale, 90 points.

Two varieties were before the New York committee October 15. Daphne, exhibited by A. Herrington, Madison, N. J., color white, Japanese reflexed, sport of Mrs. Coombes, scored commercial scale, 85 points. Clementine Touset, exhibited by the E. G. Hill Co., Richmond, Ind., color white with pearl tint, Japanese, scored commercial scale, 85 points.

Two varieties were before the Philadelphia committee October 15. Daphne, exhibited by A. Herrington, Madison, N. J., color white, Japanese incurved, sport from Mrs. Coombes, scored commercial scale, 90 points; exhibition scale, 87 points. Clementine Touset, exhibited by the E. G. Hill Co., Richmond, Ind., color blush white, Japanese, scored commercial scale, 90 points; exhibition scale, 91 points.

AZALEAS FOR FORCING.

We would like some information about azaleas for forcing for Christmas. Are the ones I have left over from last year the best or are the newly imported ones better? What temperature do they require at night?

H. J.

This subject has been ventilated within a very short time in the pages of the Review. It would seem reasonable to suppose that the plants you summered over and have well established in their pots would be the plants to force. The very opposite is the fact learned by experience. The newly imported plants are the ones to force for Christmas. Put them in a night temperature of 50 degrees for two weeks and then give them 60 degrees and plenty of spraying until the buds expand. Some may need higher than 60 degrees to get them well out by the desired time. I hope H. J. is aware of the fact that only a few varieties can be forced out at this early date. The best of all is the beautiful white, Deutsche Perle, the mottled white and pink, Vervæneana, and the deep rose pink, Simon Mardner. These three will fill the bill for Christmas. Some growers who have great heat at their command bring in that grand variety, Mme. Van der Cruyssen, but you had better not try it. W. S.

PRECAUTIONS NECESSARY.

Certainly if one wants variety in weather he has not looked for it in vain in our section. From one snowy, sleety, raw day to the warmest of the Indian summer kind has been a common occurrence. The latter is much more to be enjoyed than the former, although the high temperature has not been so good for violets as the colder days, and then, too, it forces the blooms on too rapidly, to the detriment of the crop later on. Therefore give all the air that it is possible to keep on, and take pains to keep the plants on the dry side in order not to be caught napping with a sudden change to wet, cold, raw, sloppy weather when you can hardly dry out the foliage if you try ever so hard.

The usual vigilance must be observed from now on—yes, more than usual—in keeping the crowns thoroughly clean and free from dead matter, such as old leaves, short-stemmed early bloom, etc. Some growers advocate using grape dust for the sow bugs, but we have never found anything much better than granulated sugar and Paris green. You want to hustle and exterminate all of this kind of stock at once, if you have neglected to do so before, as if left alone and they get much of a start they will eat hundreds of blooms on short notice. Of course the cleaner your house is of old wood and rubbish generally the less you will be troubled with vermin, still no house will be without them at the very best, as you can always find them indoors and out and they have to be killed.

Violets as Pot Plants.

If you have a nice local trade in potted stuff be sure and have some violets nicely established in pots to sell as window plants. If they are nicely grown and in full flower they prove quite attractive and last long enough to be desirable, even though they play out after a while from being placed in overheated rooms. Another thing in their favor is that they come at this time of year, when we do not have a large assortment of flowering plants for window decoration. If you have never given them a trial, do so this fall and see if it is not a good plan. While nearly every place has a certain "style" of trade, as I might call it, and runs to certain kinds of plants, still the enterprising florist can have his influence in shaping the demand if he sets out to do so in the right way. Generally speaking, he can sell anything, provided it is of good quality, and this is coming to be true more and more as the years go by. Take, for instance, the carnations that we grew only a few short years ago and thought very nice. Now most of them would be relegated to the waste box without our giving them any consideration whatever. "The world do move." Each grower must scramble to be on top, with the best that can be produced, both in cut blooms and in plants, even though it is hard scratching.

R. E. Shuphelt.

ANOTHER YOUNG FLORIST.

S. Hoffman, of Boston, is another young florist who is entitled to credit for his ability to hustle. He conducts two well located, busy stores in Boston, and last May took over the T. W. Dee place in Cambridge, which had been vacant all winter. He found the plant in the shape one might expect after being buffeted by storms through the coldest winter on record, without care or fire. Five months were spent in repiping, reglazing and repainting. There are eleven houses, now in first-class shape and well filled. Pot plants will be produced here for the local trade and two city stores. A large quantity of bedding stock will also be worked up for the spring business. Mr. Hoffman is only 26 years of age. For the transformation in the Dee place, which is shown in the accompanying illustrations, he gives credit to Bert Smith, who has had charge of the men engaged in putting the establishment in order.

A FINE PHALAENOPSIS.

The accompanying illustration is from a photograph of a plant taken at the establishment of Harry G. Selfridge, at Lake Geneva, Wis., and the following note is supplied by C. H. Gebhardt, the gardener in charge:

"Phalænopsis amabilis Rimestediana is one of the finest of the phalænopsis varieties lately introduced. The flowers are of the purest white and measure nearly three inches across. They flowered in the month of May and kept six weeks. They are from Java and can also be grown successfully in a cattleya house, but we grow them with our other phalænopsis in our East Indian house. They usually commence their season's growth in March, at which time the temperature of the house should be raised until the end of April, when the night temperature should not sink below 70 degrees and the day temperature range from 75 to 80 degrees, according to the brightness of the weather. This temperature we maintain until the middle of November, from which time we diminish the temperature to the end of December, when we give the plants their resting season, until about the end of March.

"The phalænopsis grows naturally in an always saturated atmosphere. We wet down the path between the benches, three times a day in their growing season and once a day at their resting season. Here in Wisconsin we ought to do that also at night in winter, when we have to fire so hard to keep up the even temperature required. If the outside temperature goes down to 28 degrees below zero, like last winter, it is a very hard job to keep up heat and have, at the same time, the required moisture. Happy those gardeners in a milder climate! We certainly don't let this phalænopsis get too dry in winter, as we would a dendrobium or calanthe. We just give them water enough to keep the surface moist.

"As I am not able to keep green sphagnum moss on the surface here, I dropped sphagnum entirely for our orchids and use only osmunda fern roots mixed with a little live sphagnum moss. I use only rain water and in summer shade heavy with roll shades. Ventilation I give only from the bottom, unless it gets too hot. I let the surplus heat escape through the top ventilation, but I don't like top ventilation on account of making the atmosphere too dry. I grow them in baskets suspended from the roof."

AMERICAN CARNATION SOCIETY.

H. Weber & Sons, Oakland, Md., register My Maryland, white, a strong growing, large-flowered variety of good constitution and general habits, an early bloomer, very fragrant, a fine keeper and shipper and with good, long stems.

L. E. Marquisee, Syracuse, N. Y., registers White Enchantress, a sport from Enchantress, pure white, having the same general form as Enchantress but far more fragrant.

F. R. Thornton, Streator, Ill., registers Melody, identical with its parent in every respect except color, which is a pleasing shade of light pink, similar to, but better than Enchantress, has shown no tendency to revert back to the Lawson type in color.

Guttman & Weber, New York, N. Y., register Victory, a red seedling of exceptional promise.

WORLD'S FAIR FLOWER SHOW.

The spontaneous and unanimous manner in which the whole trade has taken up the subject of a World's Fair flower show in the few days since plans have taken definite form has assured the unqualified success of the great undertaking. While it is hoped and anticipated that the gate receipts at the show will pay all expenses, including the cash premiums, the greatest necessity was for a guarantee fund which should be sufficient to insure everyone receiving all the money which might be due him. In this respect the response has been particularly gratifying. The guarantee fund passed $7,000 on Monday and is still growing. Before the end of the week the total will be close to $10,000. The total of the cash prizes and all possible expenses has already been covered, but it is the purpose to invite all horticulturists to unite with the present guarantors, not that there is need for further resources, but that the active support of everyone in the trade is desired to further what the projectors hope to make the greatest flower show ever given in this country.

The full list of guarantors up to Wednesday, October 26, is as follows:

There was a special meeting of the St. Louis Florists' Club on the evening of October 20, at which three members of the executive committee of the World's Fair Flower Show Association were present. After the plan and scope of the exhibition had been outlined, the St. Louis Florists' Club gave its hearty endorsement and assured co-operation by adding to the guarantee fund in excess of $1,000 and appointing a committee consisting of J. J. Beneke, F. M. Ellis and F. H. Meinhardt to co-operate with the flower show management and to in every way possible lend the aid of the club to the undertaking.

being here from Detroit and E. G. Hill up from Richmond. Practically all details of the arrangements were settled upon. Arrangements were made for music, posters, judges, etc. It was announced that the judges will be Arthur Herrington, of Madison, N. J., president of the Chrysanthemum Society of America; Wm. Duckham, gardener to D. Willis James, of Madison, N. J., and W. N. Rudd, of Mt. Greenwood, Ill. The Chrysanthemum Society announced that the Chicago seedling committee, composed of J. S. Wilson, Edward Kanst and P. J. Hauswirth will examine seedlings for certificates during the World's Fair flower show.

Manager Hauswirth states that all preparations are well under way for the exhibition and that Chief Taylor, of the Department of Horticulture at the Fair has acquiesced in every request made of him looking to the greatest facilities for staging the show. The greatest concession made is in the matter of keeping the show open until 10 p. m., the custom having been to close the building at six o'clock. Mr. Hauswirth will be at his address, 227 Michigan avenue, Chicago, until November 2, after which his address will be at the Horticultural Building, World's Fair, St. Louis.

Week ending Sept. 10	874,954
Week ending Sept. 17	1,027,918
Week ending Sept. 24	770,418
Week ending Oct. 1	772,565
Week ending Oct. 8	860,945
Week ending Oct. 15	939,774

Entering for Medals.

The requirements of the exposition necessitate that entries be made on the regular blanks of the exposition. All cut flowers go in group 108, class 643. All greenhouse plants go in group 109, class 646. All exhibitors desiring to compete for the World's Fair medals must make entry on form D for cut flowers and form C for plants. These blanks will be sent promptly on request addressed to Manager Hauswirth. The complete list of flowers and plants named, with varieties, should be written on the back of each entry blank.

The following is the scale of markings used in determining the merits of an exhibit and fixing the World's Fair award which shall be made, 100 being used as indicating perfection: Exhibits receiving markings ranging from 60 to 76 inclusive receive a bronze medal. Markings from 75 to 84 inclusive are entitled to a silver medal; 85 to 94 inclusive, a gold medal and 95 to 100 inclusive a grand prize.

Under the rules of the exposition an exhibit shall receive only one reward in any group. Under these rules the exhibitor will be entitled to receive a medal on cut flowers entered in group 108 and another on plants in group 109, but no exhibitor will be entitled to more than one medal in each group.

Rules Governing Exhibits.

The rules adopted by the World's Fair Flower Show Association, other than the ordinary requirements, are as follows:

Entries for the first day competitions must be in the manager's hands at least forty-eight hours in advance of the opening of the exhibition. Entries for succeeding days must be in the manager's hands not later than 12 o'clock noon on the day preceding that for which the class entered for is scheduled.

N. B.—Exhibitors when making entries should give promptly on a separate sheet the correct name to whom their World's Fair Pass shall be issued, that same may be sent to them if possible before the show opens.

All exhibits must be in position by noon on the days specified. No exhibits will be admitted to the hall after 11:30 a. m. on the day for competition. Judging will be done after 12 noon, after which exhibitors may attach their names to exhibits.

When it is desired that exhibits be staged by the association, the manager should be so advised in advance, by mail, with full list of articles, number of packages, number of the entries and notice of when and how they will be shipped. A copy of this letter should be placed inside the package at top, and each article plainly marked with the number of the section in which entered, in addition to the variety label.

Exhibits sent from a distance should be marked with the special tags or labels of the Department of Horticulture and express charges invariably prepaid. These tags may be had from the manager or from the Horticultural Department of the Exposition. Exhibits cannot be received earlier than two days before the opening of the exhibition.

Any variety which has not been distributed in this country may compete as a seedling. The holding of stock of a variety by wholesale plantsmen shall not, alone, constitute distribution.

No variety eligible to compete as a seedling shall be allowed to compete in other classes, except in collections, or "open to all" classes.

Any article manifestly unfit to show may be excluded by the committee, and the judges shall withhold any premium when the entries are unworthy of awards.

After the exhibits are arranged they shall be under the exclusive charge of the manager, and no one shall touch or remove them except with his consent.

The Association reserves the right to remove, at any time, from the hall, any exhibits or parts of exhibits which have become unsightly.

The hall will not be open for the removal of exhibits until 7 o'clock a. m. on the day following the close of the exhibition, and all exhibits must be removed in a reasonable time. The Association will not undertake to pack or return exhibits except by special arrangement in advance. Each exhibitor or his representative (who must have a written order from the exhibitor) is expected to be at the hall not later than 8 o'clock a. m. on the day following the closing day, and all exhibits not claimed by the owner or his representative will be disposed of at the discretion of the manager.

No flowers or plants shall be given away or sold for delivery in the hall by exhibitors.

No entry fee will be charged to exhibitors whether subscribers to guarantee fund or not.

On the third day also carnations are to be staged; 100 blooms get $20, $15 and $10 in each class, white, light pink, dark pink, scarlet, crimson, any other color. For fifty blooms the premiums are $10, $7, and $5 in each class, white, light pink, dark pink, scarlet, crimson, white variegated, yellow. Best vase of 100, seedlings admissible, gets $25, $15 and $10.

A FINE PHALAENOPSIS.

The accompanying illustration is from a photograph of a plant taken at the establishment of Harry G. Selfridge, at Lake Geneva, Wis., and the following note is supplied by C. H. Gebhardt, the gardener in charge:

"Phalaenopsis amabilis Rimestediana is one of the finest of the phalaenopsis varieties lately introduced. The flowers are of the purest white and measure nearly three inches across. They flowered in the month of May and kept six weeks. They are from Java and can also be grown successfully in a cattleya house, but we grow them with our other phalaenopsis in our East Indian house. They usually commence their season's growth in March, at which time the temperature of the house should be raised until the end of April, when the night temperature should not sink below 70 degrees and the day temperature range from 75 to 80 degrees, according to the brightness of the weather. This temperature we maintain until the middle of November, from which time we diminish the temperature to the end of December, when we give the plants their resting season, until about the end of March.

"The phalaenopsis grows naturally in an always saturated atmosphere. We wet down the path between the benches, three times a day in their growing season and once a day at their resting season. Here in Wisconsin we ought to do that also at night in winter, when we have to fire so hard to keep up the even temperature required. If the outside temperature goes down to 28 degrees below zero, like last winter, it is a very hard job to keep up heat and have, at the same time, the required moisture. Happy those gardeners in a milder climate! We certainly don't let this phalaenopsis get too dry in winter, as we would a dendrobium or calanthe. We just give them water enough to keep the surface moist.

"As I am not able to keep growing sphagnum moss on the surface here, I dropped entirely to use only osmunda fern roots mixed with a little live sphagnum moss. I use only rain water and in summer shade heavy with roll shades. Ventilation I give only from the bottom, unless it gets too hot. I let the surplus heat escape through the top ventilation, but I don't like top ventilation on account of making the atmosphere too dry. I grow them in baskets suspended from the roof."

AMERICAN CARNATION SOCIETY.

H. Weber & Sons, Oakland, Md., register My Maryland, white, a strong growing, large-flowered variety of good constitution and general habits, an early bloomer, very fragrant, a fine keeper and shipper and with good, long stems.

L. E. Marquisee, Syracuse, N. Y., registers White Enchantress, a sport from Enchantress, pure white, having the same general form as Enchantress but far more fragrant.

F. R. Thornton, Streator, Ill., registers Melody, identical with its parent in every respect except color, which is a pleasing shade of light pink, similar to, but better than Enchantress, has shown no tendency to revert back to the Lawson type in color.

Guttman & Weber, New York, N. Y., register Victory, a red seedling of exceptional promise.

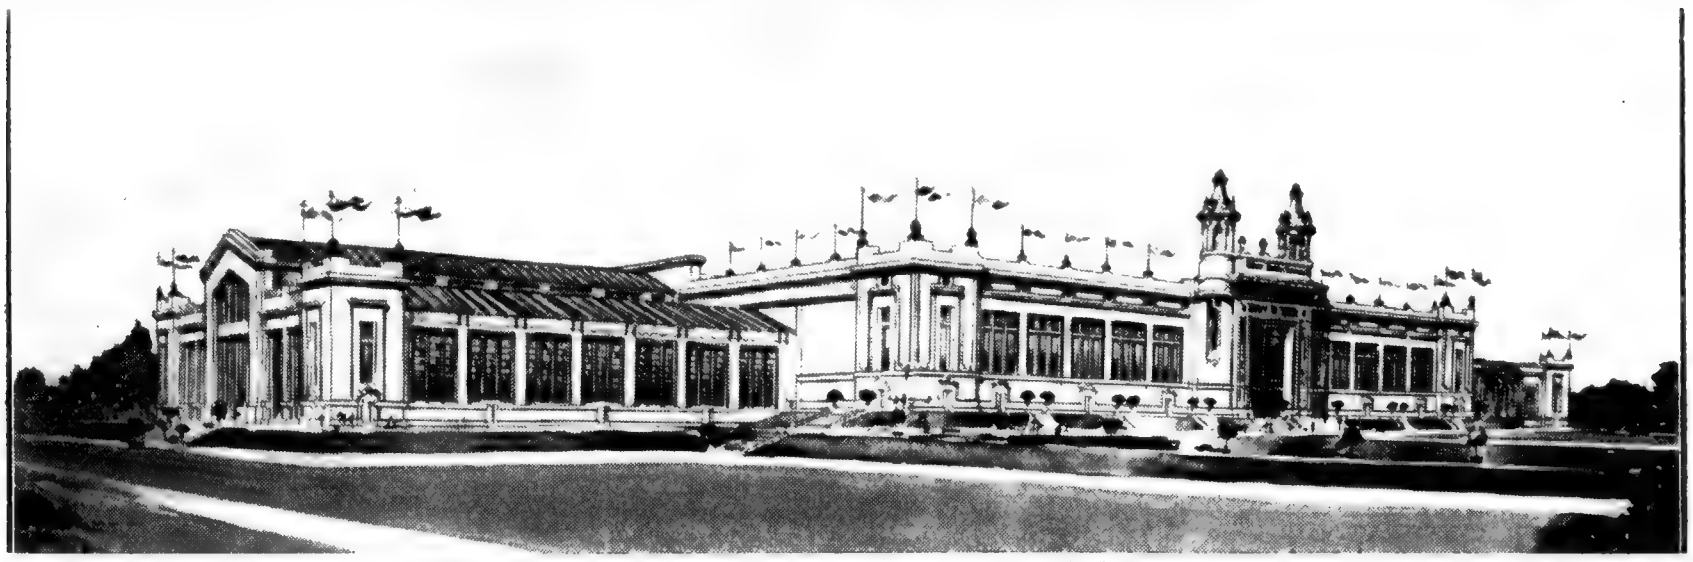
WORLD'S FAIR FLOWER SHOW.



The spontaneous and unanimous manner in which the whole trade has taken up the subject of a World's Fair flower show in the few days since plans have taken definite form has assured the unqualified success of the great undertaking. While it is hoped and anticipated that the gate receipts at the show will pay all expenses, including the cash premiums, the greatest necessity was for a guarantee fund which should be sufficient to insure everyone receiving all the money which might be due him. In this respect the response has been particularly gratifying. The guarantee fund passed $7,000 on Monday and is still growing. Before the end of the week the total will be close to $10,000. The total of the cash prizes and all possible expenses has already been covered, but it is the purpose to invite all horticulturists to unite with the present guarantors, not that there is need for further resources, but that the active support of everyone in the trade is desired to further what the projectors hope to make the greatest flower show ever given in this country.

The full list of guarantors up to Wednesday, October 26, is as follows:

There was a special meeting of the St. Louis Florists' Club on the evening of October 20, at which three members of the executive committee of the World's Fair Flower Show Association were present. After the plan and scope of the exhibition had been outlined, the St. Louis Florists' Club gave its hearty endorsement and assured co-operation by adding to the guarantee fund in excess of $1,000 and appointing a committee consisting of J. J. Beneke, F. M. Ellis and F. H. Meinhardt to co-operate with the flower show management and to in every way possible lend the aid of the club to the undertaking.

The executive committee met in Chicago October 21. President Breitmeyer

being here from Detroit and E. G. Hill up from Richmond. Practically all details of the arrangements were settled upon. Arrangements were made for music, posters, judges, etc. It was announced that the judges will be Arthur Herrington, of Madison, N. J., president of the Chrysanthemum Society of America; Wm. Duckham, gardener to D. Willis James, of Madison, N. J., and W. N. Rudd, of Mt. Greenwood, Ill. The Chrysanthemum Society announced that the Chicago seedling committee, composed of J. S. Wilson, Edward Kanst and P. J. Hauswirth will examine seedlings for certificates during the World's Fair flower show.

Manager Hauswirth states that all preparations are well under way for the exhibition and that Chief Taylor, of the Department of Horticulture at the Fair has acquiesced in every request made of him looking to the greatest facilities for staging the show. The greatest concession made is in the matter of keeping the show open until 10 p. m., the custom having been to close the building at six o'clock. Mr. Hauswirth will be at his address, 227 Michigan avenue, Chicago, until November 2, after which his address will be at the Horticultural Building, World's Fair, St. Louis.

Week ending Sept. 10	874,954
Week ending Sept. 17	1,027,918
Week ending Sept. 24	770,418
Week ending Oct. 1	772,565
Week ending Oct. 8	860,945

Entering for Medals.

The requirements of the exposition necessitate that entries be made on the regular blanks of the exposition. All cut flowers go in group 108, class 643. All greenhouse plants go in group 109, class 646. All exhibitors desiring to compete for the World's Fair medals must make entry on form D for cut flowers and form C for plants. These blanks will be sent promptly on request addressed to Manager Hauswirth. The complete list of flowers and plants named, with varieties, should be written on the back of each entry blank.

The following is the scale of markings used in determining the merits of an exhibit and awarding the World's Fair award which shall be made, 100 being used as indicating perfection. Exhibits receiving markings ranging from 60 to 76 inclusive receive a bronze medal. Markings from 75 to 84 inclusive are entitled to a silver medal; 85 to 94 inclusive a gold medal and 95 to 100 inclusive a grand prize.

Under the rules of the exposition an exhibit shall receive only one reward in any group. Under these rules the exhibitor will be entitled to receive a medal on cut flowers entered in group 108 and another on plants in group 109, but no exhibitor will be entitled to more than one medal in each group.

Rules Governing Exhibits.

The rules adopted by the World's Fair Flower Show Association other than the order of the premiums, are as follows:

Entries for the first day competitions must be in the manager's hands at least forty-eight hours in advance of the opening of the exhibition. Entries for succeeding days must be in the manager's hands not later than 12 o'clock noon on the day preceding that for which the class entered for is scheduled.

N. B.—Exhibitors when making entries should give promptly on a separate sheet the correct name to whom their World's Fair Pass shall be issued, that same may be sent to them if possible before the show opens.

All exhibits must be in position by noon on the days specified. No exhibits will be admitted to the hall after 11:30 a. m. on the day for competition. Judging will be done after 12 noon, after which exhibitors may attach their names to exhibits.

When it is desired that exhibits be staged by the association, the manager should be so advised in advance, by mail, with full list of articles, number of packages, number of the entries and notice of when and how they will be shipped. A copy of this letter should be placed inside the package at top, and each article plainly marked with the number of the section in which entered, in addition to the variety label.

Exhibits sent from a distance should be marked with the special tags or labels of the Department of Horticulture and express charges invariably prepaid. These tags may be had from the manager or from the Horticultural Department of the Exposition. Exhibits cannot be received earlier than two days before the opening of the exhibition.

Any variety which has not been distributed in this country may compete as a seedling. The holding of stock of a variety by wholesale plantsmen shall not, alone, constitute distribution.

No variety eligible to compete as a seedling shall be allowed to compete in other classes, except in collections, or "open to all" classes.

Any article manifestly unfit to show may be excluded by the committee, and the judges shall withhold any premium when the entries are unworthy of awards.

After the exhibits are arranged they shall be under the exclusive charge of the manager, and no one shall touch or remove them except with his consent.

The Association reserves the right to remove at any time, from the hall, any exhibits or parts of exhibits which have become unsightly.

The hall will not be open for the removal of exhibits until 7 o'clock a. m. on the day following the close of the exhibition, and all exhibits must be removed in a reasonable time. The Association will not undertake to pack or return exhibits except by special arrangement in advance. Each exhibitor or his representative (who must have a written order from the exhibitor) is expected to be at the hall not later than 8 o'clock a. m. on the day following the closing day, and all exhibits not claimed by the owner or his representative will be disposed of at the discretion of the manager.

No flowers or plants shall be given away or sold for delivery in the hall by exhibitors.

No entry fee will be charged to exhibitors whether subscribers to guarantee fund or not.

I am glad, therefore, to advise you that the arrangement which you have worked out meets with the entire approval of this department.

THE SHAW PREMIUMS.

The founder of the Missouri Botanical Garden, Henry Shaw, made provision in his will for "$500 annually for premiums or prizes to a flower show or exhibition, when such flower show may be established by amateurs and horticulturists of St. Louis, to be paid each year out of the funds of the garden." In 1893, by action of the trustees of the garden, there was founded, as part of these premiums or prizes, a gold medal of the value of $25 to be known as the Henry Shaw medal for the introduction of a valuable plant, to be awarded each year, when practicable, for a new plant of value for cultivation, exhibited in St. Louis, provided that the judges making awards at such exhibition shall certify that said medal is awarded for a plant of decided merit for cultivation, not previously an article of North American commerce, and introduced to such commerce by the exhibitor during the year in which said award is made.

With the sanction of the president of the board of trustees the director of the Garden has authorized the managers of the World's Fair Flower Show to offer the amount of $500, for the present year, in the form of twelve Shaw medals, under the conditions stated above, and $200 in cash prizes. It will be seen that the opportunity is an unusual one for those who have this year made notable additions to American horticulture to exhibit their plants in St. Louis and win this exclusive recognition of their enterprise, in addition to any of the World's Fair or other premiums that they may compete for. There is nothing in the language governing the founding of the Shaw medal to prevent its award for fruits, vegetables or decorative plants other than flowers, complying with the requiremnets as to novelty and distinct value for cultivation, the only restriction being that the policy of the Garden is to request judges to make awards for plants promising to be of permanent rather than merely transient value, and the manager of the Flower Show will therefore receive entries for this medal in any branch of horticulture.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

Chrysanthemums rule the market. The early sorts have given place to the mid-season varieties now in their glory. There is a fair amount of business, quite as much as can be expected at the end of October, but it must be frankly admitted that it would take a Christmas or an Easter to sell the stock of flowers at fair prices.

Each good variety of chrysanthemum, as it appears, sells well at good prices, but the poorer flowers of the varieties displaced often spoil or are sold at any price. There are many fine sorts in. The Leo Niessen Co. has Col. Appleton, Mrs. Henry Robinson, H. Balsley, Major Bonnaffon and Ivory. The Flower Market has Miss Florence Harris, a fine yellow; Mrs. Robinson, Col. Appleton and Ivory. Samuel S. Pennock has William Duckham, a superb lavender, an unusual shade; Col. Appleton in exhibition form, Mrs. Coombes, Marie Liger, pink, not yellow as erroneously stated, and Mrs. Robinson. These are simply quoted as examples. All the centers of trade have fine varieties of merit and in quantity.

Violets are selling fairly well, in recognition of their improved quality. S. S. Pennock has white violets. They are much sought for weddings. Roses and carnations feel the over-production most. A great many are sold at fair prices, but there are too many of them, making the average price low. The Leo Niessen Co. has added bouvardia and pansies to the list. Eugene Bernheimer has added mignonette and the Flower Market has added calla lilies.

A B. and M. Grower.

Nearly all the principal B. and M. growers whose products figure in the Philadelphia market are located on one or the other of the roads that stretch out from the Reading Terminal like fingers from the palm of the hand. It was on one of these roads that Eugene Weiss, the well known retailer and grower, conducted Phil to his place at Hatboro recently. Mr. Weiss' place is beautifully situated on high ground about two city blocks from the station. A conveniently arranged building serves as office and workshop. Underneath are two large return tubular boilers, a good sized cooling room and below all a fine well from which the water is pumped through the pipes to all the greenhouses by means of a Worthington force pump. There is also a tank for liquid manure operated by this pump which stands in the workshop, the well water being shut off and the manure water being admitted into the pipes by means of valves. There are ten greenhouses; a range of six houses even-span, open between, each about 10x175 feet, and four detached houses, the same length as the range but varying in width, one being about twenty-five feet, two about twenty feet each and one about fifteen feet. The first eight houses are planted with Brides and Maids, the narrower detached house with carnations and the last house with Liberty.

The front and back houses in the range are planted with Brides, the four center houses with Maids, grafted stock, which, after bearing continuously for a year, were cut back in September and are now breaking freely from the old canes. The front house of Brides is like the four Maid houses, but the back house of Brides, the only one in benches, is planted with young stock. The two detached tea rose houses, also ground beds, are further advanced. Own-root stock predominates.

Foreman Paul Bender—no, not the Athletic's pitcher—he spoke of shoots but never of curves—favors the grafted stock. A new house 12x70 feet is planned for propagating and grafting. The carnation house was in excellent condition. Joost, Enchantress, Queen Louise and Mrs. Lawson all looked well. The whole place was neatly stocked, with not a weed visible. Outside double petunias and peonies have been specialties in their season. The cut of the place is shipped by the night foreman on the early train. The boxes are met by Samuel Zilley, who distributes the flowers among his customers.

His Losses.

He was a cheerful looking man, evidently in the prime of life, a well-to-do man, judging from appearances, who had secured some measure of success as a result of years of hard work. He was telling two brother florists of his losses, an unusual theme, treated with perfect good humor. "When I first came to this country," he said, "I had $1,000. I looked about for a good investment outside of my business, where this money would grow and yield some revenue. I put it into oil stock. I never got anything from it and I never will. Later on," he continued thoughtfully, "I bought twenty acres of ground in the south. I thought they would be valuable some day. They were dirt cheap. They are even cheaper today. I have put it in my will that I am to be buried there. It isn't every man who can be buried in twenty acres of ground," he concluded with a smile.

Various Notes.

The Stratford Flower Farm is using a private mailing card, pea green in color.

Miss Leedom, who sells for J. Henry Bartram, of Lansdowne, has the distinction of being the only wholesale saleswoman in the city. She carries roses in a valise instead of the conventional tray and has thoroughly mastered the art of economizing space.

William P. Craig had a large wedding order at Chadd's Ford last Tuesday.

The Greenmont Nursery, Charles A. Cox, is putting in the Wren patent grate bar, which provides for expansion and contraction.

Hitchings & Co. are just finishing the glazing on a two-sectioned greenhouse at Upsal, Germantown, for William Bayard.

Hugh Graham has a fine new pink chrysanthemum grown at his plant at Logan.

James M. Thoirs, of 542 Market street, Camden, N. J., has put a handsome new wagon on the street. He has been doing an excellent business this fall and is looking forward to a good season. His window was decorated with choice yellow chrysanthemums a few days ago.

J. J. Habermehl's Sons decorated for the Clover Club dinner at the Bellevue-Stratford last week. Oak leaves, cosmos and Beauties were used.

of visitors inside. R. C. Hayden reports an active shipping business, chiefly in Brides, Maids and carnations.

Edward Reid has the shipping business down to a very fine point. He knows just how many petals of a rose ought to be open for each hundred miles of railroad to be traversed and just how far open a carnation should be to give perfect satisfaction on arriving at its destination.

William J. Baker will have a splendid lot of Ivory and other white chrysanthemums just right for Hallowe'en and All Saints' day.

John R. North, of Sewell, N. J., is sending fine chrysanthemums and callas to the Flower Market.

Paul Richter, of the Henry F. Michell Co., is authority for the statement that their business exceeds that of last season very considerably. Money has been spent in advertising and it is yielding returns.

M. Rice and Eugene Weiss went out of Flourtown a few days ago to see George E. Campbell. Mr. Rice reports the Brides and Maids in good condition, full of buds as fine in size and color as in winter.

Myers & Samtman are cutting countless numbers of Beauties, chiefly medium and short stems. They go to the Flower Market.

Eugene Bernheimer has been doing a lot of business with oak leaves and other autumn foliage. He receives many chrysanthemums of quality and some Queen of Edgely.

J. Liddon Pennock and Mrs. Pennock are expected back from Bermuda next week.

Fred Ehret is keeping up the reputation of his fine Maids and Brides. His place is very pretty. It is finished in white, with plenty of green about.

John Burton is cutting Liberty roses by the thousands.

To G. R., of West Grove, Pa.: Both Mr. Conner and I fully realized that we could not see many of the Chester county places in so short a time. We hope to see them all at some future time.

RADIATION.

I have a house 18x90, ten feet to ridge, south sash bars twelve feet long, north bars nine feet; glass on west end, side walls four and one-half feet high, double boarded with paper between. From the boiler there is a 4-inch flow feeding two 2½-inch flows on the purlin posts and ten 1½-inch returns. Have I enough radiation for 60 degrees in zero weather.

L. E. W.

The piping which has been provided gives more than 500 feet of radiation, while the requirements of the house are only a little more than 400 feet. If the boiler has sufficient capacity and is set so as to provide sufficient fall in the pipes the plant, if properly fired, should give satisfaction.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The market at the opening of the week resembles the Johnstown flood, for it is simply overwhelmed, not only with chrysanthemums, but roses, carnations and even violets, which are here in almost midwinter profusion. Nearly 100 boxes arrived on a single train on Saturday evening. Thousands were disposed of as low as 20 cents per hundred and specials have not been above 75 cents. Orchids touched bottom last week, fine cattleyas going as low as $15 per hundred. The tendency is now toward better prices. Even the street merchants took a flyer in them on Saturday.

Two weeks more of the low tide and the rush of the returning waters will make welcome music. Thanksgiving is very near and before it arrives there will be abundant cause for it.

Various Notes.

Franz Pammer, 33 years old, was found dead in his office at Tarrytown one day last week, apparently a suicide, with a bullet in his left temple and his revolver beside him. He was a genial and popular man and his rash act is much regretted.

Carl Beckstedt, of Oswego, N. Y., one of that city's prominent florists, is visiting Geo. Saltford.

William Matthews, of Great Neck, L. I., son of the veteran florist, George Matthews, has started in the growing business, building this fall three houses 20x180 and utilizing two and one-half acres of excellent land for nursery purposes.

Elliott's red letter sale did not draw the crowd expected, owing to stormy weather, and it will be repeated shortly. The apathy shown by the retail florists of New York and vicinity this season is unusual. Even the clearing sale at Dreyer's saw few of the Broadway and Fifth avenue contingent usually in evidence on these bargain occasions. Instead, the representatives of the department store conservatories were out in force and managed to absorb most of the "good things" offered. Cleary's has a new voice at the stand, Ambrose Cleary now officiating.

Mr. Burnham is rejoicing in the completion of the Bloomingdale store and conservatory. Both are a credit to his management and no better facilities for a successful florist business can be found in the city.

Thursday sees the formal opening of the great subway and floral displays will signalize the ceremonies.

Last week the re-opening of the old Weber & Field's Music Hall was an occasion for floral elaboration in which Twenty-eighth street was especially interested. Not only were all the prominent retailers called upon for flowers, but many of the wholesalers, as is their yearly custom, sent enormous quantities of them in all manner of artistic arrangement.

The great fall exhibitions are in full blast, or will be by the time this paper reaches its readers. Madison celebrates on Thursday and Friday; next week Tarrytown and Philadelphia, and so on for a score of days, culminating in the great show of the American Institute in New York, November 10 to 17.

President Traendly has already received many promises of exhibits of chrysanthemums for the club's next meeting, the second Monday in November, and urges all intending exhibitors to send their applications for space in time and their stock to Secretary Young, where it will be given proper care.

Sigmund Geller has advanced to a ground floor convenience at 110 West Twenty-eighth street, where he occupies the whole store and basement, giving him greatly increased facilities.

In a late report of Flatbush bowling the veteran, Louis Schmutz, Sr., was not credited with his scores for three games, which netted him an average of over 200. There are nights when Louie can sing the Marseillaise and secure all the pots at the same time, and this was one of them. He will doubtless be on the team that rolls the New York club in the near future in the "tri-city" tournament, in which Hoboken is expected to participate as the third competitor.

William Siebrecht, of Astoria, who has the best cold storage plant in this vicinity, if not in the country, is the acknowledged bulb king, handling over a million lily of the valley yearly, in addition to many thousands of narcissi, lilies and hyacinths. Five acres are devoted to peonies, lilacs, snow balls and garden vegetables, and his glass totals over 25,000 square feet.

Condon, of Brooklyn, will hold his yearly chrysanthemum show from November 1 to 15.

Arthur Boddington's big store looks lonely since the fall shipments. Hardly a bulb remains unsold.

The first Paper White narcissi of the season made their appearance at J. K. Allen's on Saturday, also the new carnations Bellmore and Mrs. Clarence Mackay, grown by R. P. Jeffrey & Son, of Bellmore, L. I., the former a brick red of splendid strength and brilliance that should make a popular novelty.

Ghormley's new ice box is complete and is a monster.

Langjahr has been putting in a large share of his time since the St. Louis convention among his growers and is now "ready for all the business that comes his way."

The creditors of George E. Bradshaw, who is in bankruptcy, will hold their first meeting in the office of N. S. Smith, referee, 68 William street, November 2, at 1:30 p. m.

Hanfling & Kleppner are doing an increasing business in supplies, particularly baskets and pot covers. They showed a nice line at the S. A. F. convention.

A. L. Young & Co. are handling some extra fine Enchantress, Genevieve Lord and Goethe from Theodore Hengstenberg, of Hempstead.

Phil Kessler, manager of the Cut Flower Exchange, reports the early installation of a new ice box 8x15 feet for the accommodation of the growers who may have stock left over from the early morning sales.

Charles Smith, Sr., of Woodside, leaves Saturday for Scotland, where he will join his wife and enjoy a three months' holiday. His business will be in the hands of his three sons and under their management in the future.

R. W. Perkins is back from the mountains, fully recovered, and again associated with his father, the veteran wholesaler, John J. Perkins.

Jos. Leikens has a very pretty store at 7 East Thirty-third street and will build a conservatory at the rear. His nearness to the popular Waldorf-Astoria will be of great advantage and his success at Newport during the past summer has developed a class of customers that make smooth seas.

All the other Newport florists who have New York connections, Hodgson, Siebrecht and Wadley & Smyth, are back again at headquarters, evidently satisfied with their summer. Siebrecht & Son have again established their branch establishment at the Arcade, Fifth avenue and Forty-sixth street.

SALT LAKE CITY.

Law Bros., of Butte, Mont., have bought the retail store of the Salt Lake-Huddart Floral Co., and the business is now purely a wholesale one, conducted by the proprietor, Mr. Bausford. The Law Bros. are doing nicely with the retail end. P. T. Huddart is no longer connected with the concern and has opened a store of his own on Second Southeast street.

The B. C. Morris Floral Co.'s greenhouses are in good shape, all the stock looking well. W. J. Burnette is the grower in charge. They do one of the largest retail businesses in town, Thomas Hobday being the manager.

The weather is cool, with frost and occasional snow. Business is fair. B.

Wyomissing, Pa.—Frank Shearer will devote a part of his space to forcing cauliflower this winter.

BUFFALO.

Various Notes of Interest.

There is rather too much politics these days for business to be very brisk, but a good many October weddings have helped. Carnations are now more plentiful and, for this early season, were never so fine. Enchantress, Lawson, Estelle, The Queen, Queen Louise, Boston Market and old Joost are all giving us fine flowers and stems. It sometimes takes years to find out the true value of a variety. A bed of Estelle planted on July 5 has given us flowers as large as average Lawson and stems eighteen inches long. I am afraid many scarlets sent out since, with a fine character and costly price, will go, or have gone, down to oblivion "unhonored and unsung," while Estelle is better than it was four years ago. Everyone who was fortunate enough to purchase The Queen has nothing but praise for it. This is what we expected from seeing it grow last winter. Now that Peter Fisher has immortalized himself by giving us Lawson and Enchantress, he might be good enough to give us a flower with the incomparable habit, freedom and size of Enchantress with the color of Joost. Then we will let him go home. Harlowarden is proving itself the king of the crimson. It is giving us fine, long-stemmed flowers in abundance.

Violets are plentiful, but not moving very fast. Chrysanthemums are just as much in demand as they have been for the past seven or eight years. Just as much, and that is saying a good deal, for it evaporates the idea held by many that the great furore in their favor ten or twelve years ago was a fleeting fad and that they would soon drop into the unnoticeable. The mum is going to fill its place in the cycle of the season as favorably as any other flower. True, there are no more $8 to $10 per dozen monsters wanted. 'Twas vulgar when they were. From $2 to $4 or $5 per dozen is now the popular flower. People with good purposes and a taste for flowers expect to get a dozen good mums for $3, and so they can.

Bye the by, is there any leading flower or plant you can think of that has gone up in price within the past five or six years? I can't, with one important exception. During this time all material with which we construct, with the fuel to keep up heat and the labor to do the work, has gone up from twenty-five to seventy-five per cent. The exception is, of course, the carnation, and why that has risen from fifty to 100 per cent, both wholesale and retail, within less than ten years, is by the simplest of economic laws, excellence of product. The quality of the carnation, more particularly within three or four years, in all that makes a flower admired and desired has improved 100 per cent and the price has risen with it.

We had a good business meeting of the club last week. Mr. Gould, of Middleport, was present; came in forty miles to attend a meeting. How is that, you city boys? A preliminary premium list for the Sweeney Co.'s spring show was presented to the club and adopted. The firm gives $1,100 in cash prizes and they are almost entirely for Easter stock. As this show will be held about two weeks before Easter, it will be a splendid opportunity, not only to capture some good prizes, but to show the public what you have to offer.

The H. A. Meldrum Show.

Everything is progressing most favorably. Although there are great attractions both east and west of us, we fully expect many of the foremost growers of the country to be represented. C. H. Keitsch, the manager, has had many inquiries from the leading specialists. D. B. Long was appointed chairman of the press committee, with power to appoint his assistants. This committee is not so much for the daily press alone as for the "diffusion of knowledge" and explain to visitors the different classes, premiums, etc. Simple as it may seem to us, the general public has a vague and confused conception of what all those first, second and third class cards really mean. W. T. Bell, of Franklin, Pa., Peter Crowe, of Utica, N. Y., and our own Prof. Cowell will be the judges.

Now, last November the florists from surrounding cities, towns and hamlets came in to us in goodly numbers, and that was most gratifying. Come again and you won't be disappointed and we shall be delighted.

It is a question whether the Buffalo florists, that is, all of them, fully realize what the H. A. Meldrum Co. is doing for our trade. It is not philanthropy on their part. It is business. It is advertising, and I am sure we all hope sincerely that this novel method of advertising will repay them. But that does not detract in the least from the great benefit it does to our business at large and for the glorious chrysanthemum in particular.

We have not found any individual or syndicate of florists in our town willing (if they were able) to stand the loss of a flower show. So the problem is solved. Five times as many people see your products as would were an admission fee charged and that's the chief benefit to us of holding exhibitions. So it is your duty, fellow florists, one and all, to make an exhibit if you have anything at all meritorious. We can't all be first, and for that matter the third prize in any class will pay you well for your flowers. In all competitions there must be a number of the "also rans," and the man who refrains from making an exhibit because he has been told and thinks that someone else has better flowers needs a good injection of dope to make him dance up to the barrier. If it is impossible for you to exhibit, then attend the show as often as you can lend us the light of your countenance and genial presence. Talk it up to your customer at every opportunity and in every way do all you can to help the show and encourage this enterprising and worthy firm.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

The horse show always has an invigorating effect on the demand and this, coupled with reduced receipts, has served to put the market in a much better condition than last week. Thursday, Friday and Saturday were very dull days, much below the average for this season of the year, although receipts were above the ordinary. Monday, however, found a brisk demand and all good stock cleaned out early in the day, and Tuesday, usually a quiet day, was good.

Violets are actively sought, for the first time this season, and it is probable that there will be a good market for them all through the week, for many thousands are worn at the horse show. The Beauty crop seems to be coming off all along the line, perhaps due to the change to cool weather, which has had a beneficial effect in point of quality, color now being much better than it was during the heated term. The change to frosty nights has given many of the tea roses another attack of mildew and averages are very low for growers who have failed to take necessary precautions. Those whose cut is of good average quality are now getting satisfactory returns.

This week has brought a change in the carnation market, colored sorts having been in fair demand for almost the first time this fall. The mid-season varieties of chrysanthemums came on in full force very suddenly, Monday the market being bare of good stock, while Tuesday saw large receipts of Bonnaffon, Duckham, Appleton and other fancy sorts. With so much good stock the under grades are very slow sellers. The growers of these will not be satisfied with the returns.

While we have had light frosts, no harm has yet been done to outdoor stock in many localities and there is still plenty of cosmos to be had, also a few poor dahlias and few gladioli. The green goods are in fair demand and not too abundant supply.

Large quantities of stock are ordered for shipment to New Orleans Saturday night for All Saints' day.

The Flower Show.

There will be a meeting of the executive committee of the Horticultural Society this afternoon to complete details for the big exhibition November 15 to 19. A superintendent has yet to be engaged. Henry Wittbold is mentioned as a capable man for this difficult post. The show will be advertised as in the Fine Arts building, the entrance being by way of the elevators there, although in reality the larger part of the show will be in the Auditorium, the two buildings being as one on this floor.

Various Notes.

Peter Reinberg says that heating plants have changed as much as any other feature of a greenhouse since the days when he did his own night firing. Then he used hot water; now he installs steam, with which one of the greatest troubles is returning the condensation to the boiler. The pumps refuse to take the water too hot. This difficulty he overcomes by using the Morehead steam trap, which he says works to perfection. Another difficulty with steam is that temperature will vary more or less every time the boiler is fired, changing the pressure on the gauge. To obviate this he attaches a regulating valve to his main feed pipe just inside the greenhouses. This is a big valve made by the Foster Engineering Co., Newark, N. J., which makes the steam pressure in the coils whatever is desired, no matter whether the boiler pressure is ten or sixty pounds. If the weather grows colder, instead of turning on more pipes, the man in charge simply opens the regulating valve to admit more steam.

One of the largest buyers in this market is the Pittsburg Florists' Exchange, conducted by P. J. Demas, a countryman of John Mangel and akin to him in his ability to handle large quantities of cut flowers. But the Pittsburger wholesales his stock and receives, in addition to his large purchases here, considerable quantities of roses, carnations and seasonable flowers produced in his own vicinity, which he sells on commission.

Poehlmann Bros. are right in the midst of their chrysanthemum season, cutting splendid Appleton and fine, well developed Bonnaffon in quantity.

E. C. Amling is among those who are getting fine blooms of Wm. Duckham chrysanthemum, last season's great novelty.

Wm. Dittman, of New Castle, is sending J. A. Budlong a large cut of fine Beauties.

P. J. Hauswirth had a big decoration for the Auditorium Monday night, the hotel being filled to its greatest capacity by horse show visitors.

E. H. Hunt is getting in some very fine Viviand-Morel chrysanthemums.

Sinner Bros. have 320 feet of callas five feet wide, planted out, just coming into full bloom. They are very healthy.

George Reinberg is getting a heavy cut of Liberties and Beauties.

E. E. Pieser at Kennicott's says the business this week has looked like old times, but there is still too much poor stock for a good market.

C. W. McKellar is again receiving orchids in quantity and variety.

Bassett & Washburn are cutting La Detroit of fine quality. The introducer saw it the other day and agreed it would be hard to beat at St. Louis.

F. C. Struvy has bought out C. Paasch, at 224 Clybourn avenue, and is giving his personal attention to the place, leaving his daughter in charge at the Halsted street stand. Mr. Paasch and his wife had long done a fine trade on Clybourn avenue and have gotten together a competence.

Wietor Bros. say that business is very good and they sell out quickly twice a day. Benthey's is another place where the fashion is to sell out early.

Weiland & Risch are getting in a big cut of mums. They report the best call for medium priced yellows.

The E. F. Winterson Co. will make a specialty of wild smilax now that the weather is cool and it can be kept.

Albert Fuchs landed in New York on Monday and is expected to reach Chicago today.

Vaughan & Sperry have made connection with two large rose growers and are now receiving good sized daily receipts in all lines.

The A. L. Randall Co. reports good business in violets and fancy mums, the local demand being good since the horse show opened.

Percy Jones, manager of the Growers' Market, reports that David Reed, proprietor of the Downers Grove Floral Co. will again send his stock to the Market after November 1.

J. B. Deamud is getting mums as good and as plentiful as anyone.

M. Winandy has dropped Meteor in favor of Liberty, from which he is cutting well.

This is election night at the Florists' Club. Flower show matters will also be up for special attention.

Visitors: President Philip Breitmeyer, Detroit; E. G. Hill, Richmond, Ind.; F. R. Pierson, Tarrytown, N. Y.; G. Heinrich, Crete, Ill.; Wm. La Hyn, Chesterton, Ind.

ALL ABOUT FIANCEE.

We have received from James Hartshorne, manager of the Chicago Carnation Co., Joliet, Ill., the following communication, to which he gives the title, "A Plain Statement Regarding Carnation Fiancee":

This famous carnation is a 1900 seedling raised by F. Dorner & Sons Co., La Fayette, Ind., and grown by them until and during the season of 1902-1903. In the fall of 1902, the pleasing color, size and stem of the blooms exhibited by this company attracted the attention of the writer of these notes, who at once asked the firm to name a price for the entire stock. At first Dorners declared they would not sell the variety, as their intention was to grow it for cut flowers themselves and not disseminate the variety for many years to come, believing they could make more money out of it that way. Your scribe, however, continued negotiations until Dorners named a price which took all the ambition out of me so far as ever purchasing the stock was concerned, but I could not resist the temptation of going to La Fayette to see the variety growing, and the sight I saw there more than ever convinced me that this magnificent carnation was in a class by itself and would take many years to beat, whereupon negotiations were again opened, with the result that the stock of 150 plants and all the cuttings that could be produced from them that season (1902-03) were purchased by the Chicago Carnation Co. for the sum of $10,000, no more, no less.

The price paid was kept a secret for a long time as the new owners did not want to make the carnation famous any other way than by its own merits. This we have succeeded in doing to our entire satisfaction and to the satisfaction of all those who have seen the variety on exhibition and growing in the greenhouses at Joliet.

I personally named the carnation at the Chicago Flower Show, immediately after it won all sweepstakes and judged as the finest carnation in the world, by such competent judges as Arthur Herrington, Madison, N. J.; Prof. Cowell, Buffalo, N. Y.; Emil Buettner, Park Ridge, Ill.

The name Fiancee was at once popular and the vase of blooms with their number of prizes tagged to it was the sensation of the show and, as the secretary of the Horticultural Society said at that time, had been the means of swelling the receipts of admissions to the show considerably, larger than they otherwise would have been.

It is needless to say what honors Fiancee has won since that time as they have been published in the trade papers from time to time. It has maintained its reputation and won over all comers every time exhibited and what pleases us most is that we and all who see it growing, believe it to be as free a bloomer as any carnation in commerce. This is now the second season we are growing it. We are more than pleased with its behavior. We have not lost a single plant out of the 30,000 we have benched through stem-rot. It has no rust at all, nor bacteria. Propagates very easily; roots in three weeks. Seems to thrive and do as well in field culture as pot-grown. Last season we benched it in a very heavy soil. This season the soil is much lighter and seems to do equally as well; in fact, it seems more free this year. We now have about 8,000 plants in full bloom, and about 25,000 pinched back for cuttings, so we anticipate no trouble in filling orders, which can be done without overpropagating the variety, the one thing which we have avoided all along.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Reports in the cut flower trade are becoming more encouraging each week. Some pretty good-sized orders were made up last week for weddings, receptions, dinners and funerals. Over-the-counter sales are as yet somewhat slow with the uptown florists, although downtown they are reported as fair. The windows of all the stores are now mostly filled with chrysanthemums, which are coming in very freely and in consequence are lowering the prices of roses and carnations, particularly roses. Nearly all flowers, except carnations, have taken a decided drop. The quality of the mums is very good but prices realized are somewhat lower than those of preceding seasons. Extra high grade bring $3 per dozen. Very good blooms can be bought for $15 per hundred. Polly Rose and Robinson are best in white, with Bergmann next. Some good Yellow Queens and Glory of Pacific are seen today. There is a scarcity of good pink so far this season.

Roses, on the whole, are of very good quality and plenty of them for the demand. Extra fine stock is being bought at from $4 to $5 per hundred; first and second grades run $2 and $3. Bride and Maid are most plentiful, and short Beauties. Extra good Meteor and Liberty are a little scarce.

Carnations, too, are quite plentiful and are holding up in price, $2.50 being asked for fancy and 75 cents to $2 for good stock, $1 for common. The best pink is Lawson, though still with short stems. Joost has good stems. Boston Market, Hill and Wolcott are best in white. Estelle is the only good red just now. Enchantress is in big demand when fancy. The violets are much better in size and color with the cool weather. The past week sales on them were much better, 35 to 50 cents per hundred being asked for the best.

The season for cosmos, dahlias, tuberoses and other outdoor flowers is about ended. In greens the market is well stocked.

Visitors the past week were A. C. Canfield and Mrs. Canfield, Springfield, Ill.; Mrs. M. S. Vesey, Fort Wayne, Ind.; W. H. Dreer, Philadelphia; P. J. Hauswirth and J. C. Vaughan, Chicago, and Elmer D. Smith, Adrian, Mich. The latter three were down to arrange for the World's Fair flower show next month.

H. F. Burt, of Taunton, Mass., has a grand display of dahlias in the Horticulture building at the World's Fair. Mr. Burt, who is here in person, says that these roots were planted July 12 to 15 and this is the result. There are nearly 100 varieties on exhibition and a great attraction.

The table decorations in the china department of the Simmons Hardware Co. drew many ladies Wednesday and Thursday of last week. Ostertag Bros.' table was for a stag affair, with gold fish pond in the center and vase of pink pond lilies. The corner of the room was decorated with oak leaves which made a pretty effect. Miss M. S. Newman displayed good taste in green and white with electrical effects, using white orchids for the center, very pleasing to the eye. C. Young & Sons' and Mrs. Ellison's tables were also much admired. Both were made up of pink orchids and lily of the valley. The tables all came in for their share of praise from the large crowds that passed in and out during the two days that they were on exhibition. Each visitor was furnished with a slip to cast a vote for which he considered the best table, with the result that Ostertag won first prize, Miss Newman second, Young & Sons third and Ellison Floral Co. fourth.

On Thursday night a number of florists, nurserymen and seedsmen met at F. M. Ellis' place to discuss the World's Fair flower show with the executive committee of the association, who were here for a day making arrangements regarding the great show with the World's Fair officials. Everything is satisfactorily arranged, so as to go ahead with the plans that were laid out in Chicago. A fund of $600 was guaranteed by those present. A committee was appointed to co-operate with the national committee, as follows: J. J. Beneke, Frank M. Ellis and Fred H. Meinhardt. A special meeting of the Florists' Club was held Saturday night. It was decided to abandon the proposed chrysanthemum exhibition in the club rooms November 10, owing to the big show. Additional subscriptions to the guarantee fund were made, bringing the local total above $1,000. The work of the association was endorsed and the members will do all in their power to make the show a grand success. The next meeting of the local club will be held Thursday afternoon, November 10, and all visitors here for the big show are invited to attend the afternoon meeting. J. J. B.

The Market.

Business is showing considerable improvement, not that the aggregate sales foot up any higher, but the demand is much heavier and in many cases can not be met. Were it not for that fact sales would be much larger. What caused the increased demand it is hard to tell, but it is likely due to the colder weather which we are now having. Still there has been no killing frost and outdoor flowers are still nicely in bloom. Several large funerals have also helped the market greatly.

There is a good supply of roses of almost all kinds, but the best of this stock is quickly bought up. Beauties are in very good demand, with prices advancing. All kinds of roses are of better quality and consequently bring better returns. Carnations are plentiful one day and scarce the next, with the demand fairly good. Mums are not quite so plentiful.

FANCY MUMS

The big mid-season varieties are on in full force and we are handling such fancy sorts as Halliday, Duckham, Byron, Bonnaffon, Pennsylvania, Appleton, Viviand-Morel, etc.

There are lots of culls and third-grade blooms suitable for funeral work, but first-class stock is scarce. Violets are beginning to be called for and the price has almost doubled. The singles are preferred here. Other stock is about as last reported.

Various Notes.

All plans are working smoothly for a first-class flower show this year. These shows, given by the Florists' Society, have always been very successful and this year will be no exception. Many growers have already signified their intention of making exhibits. This is the very best time for growers having new varieties to send them in to be seen by the boys, as there is always a large number of the craft on hand, with many out of town growers also. The date this year is Saturday, November 12. Kindly send all blooms prepaid to the Cincinnati Florists' Society, Jabez Elliott Flower Market, in care of the superintendent, and they will be properly staged and cared for.

Chas. Pommert reports a very good crop of gold fish this year, very nicely colored. He makes a specialty of them and his farm at Amelia is well worth a visit. He also raises "green goods" of the best quality.

From present indications there will be from fifteen to twenty of the boys of this city who will make the trip to Richmond, Ind., Thursday. It will give them a chance to see the chrysanthemum in all its glory.

E. G. Gillett was in Springfield Monday, attending the funeral of his oldest brother, who died Saturday after an illness extending over several years.

Visitors were Miss White, Lexington, Ky., and Fred Fulle, of Richmond, Ind.

BOSTON.

The Market.

The increasing output of chrysanthemums has caused a general weakening in prices the past week. Stock has cleared out well, however, very little being left over any day, except short-stemmed roses and low grade chrysanthemums. About $3 per dozen has been the top price on Beauties. Bride and Bridesmaid of best quality have averaged from $6 to $8, while short-stemmed stock kept over night in ice chests has gone at 50 cents per hundred. Some very nice Bon Silene are coming to the Park Street Market, selling at 75 cents per bunch of twenty-five. Some good Kaiserin and Carnot still come in. Best carnations have held at $3. All good stock has brought $2, ordinary grades $1. Chrysanthemums are now very plentiful and of unusually good quality. The top price seems to have been $2 per dozen, although $2.50 was obtained for some select blooms. About $1.50 has been a fair average price for nice flowers, while the low grades have brought 35 cents to 50 cents per dozen. So far there has been no glut of these flowers, but some congestion is likely in the next few weeks. Single violets clear out well. Those from Wm. Sim bring 75 cents per hundred. Doubles continue small. Some nice mignonette has appeared, as well as a few Cypripedium insigne. Asparagus and adiantum remain about the same.

Chrysanthemum Show Notes.

A joint conference of members of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, Gardeners' and Florists' Club, Park Street Flower Market and Horticultural Club in regard to the entertainment of visiting members of the C. S. A. was held on October 22. Arrangements are progressing nicely.

Advance entries indicate that the coming show will be a first-class one. Growers have been pleased with the recent spell of clear Indian summer weather. Some who neglected to use shading lost a few blooms in this vicinity.

Visitors will have an opportunity to witness a thorough demonstration of the best methods of fighting the brown tail and gypsy moths at Arlington, on November 5, at 2 o'clock, under the auspices of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society. There will be a lecture by Prof. A. H. Kirkland. Trained foresters will be on hand to demonstrate the most important methods of field work, while Superintendent Pettigrew, of the Boston park system, will exhibit what is probably the largest power sprayer in the country. The making and use of the lime and sulphur wash for the San Jose scale will also be shown. There will be a good opportunity to inspect some of the high-class vegetable growing establishments in Arlington.

of the best the club has ever held, being enthusiastic throughout. Three new members were elected. The report of the finance committee in regard to the coming chrysanthemum show was quite satisfactory. J. K. M. L. Farquhar was the speaker of the evening, telling of his trip to European floricultural centers. Kenneth Finlayson spoke of Chrysanthemum leucanthemum superbum as a magnificent plant. He saw it in bloom in Europe last year, from August to November, height two and one-half to five feet, flowers five to six inches across, long spikes fine for cutting. W. N. Craig exhibited a bunch of Bouvardia Humboldtii, also a spike of Cattleya Bowringeana carrying forty-seven flowers.

Quite a number of visits will shortly be made to various private estates by the garden committee of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society. These include the E. A. Clarke estate in Jamaica Plain, where Wm. A. Riggs asks inspection of houses of roses, carnations and chrysanthemums. W. F. Roy, at the E. S. Converse estate, and James Garthley, on the H. H. Rogers estate, Fairhaven, each ask consideration for chrysanthemum houses, in addition to the M. F. Plant estate already mentioned in the REVIEW.

Wm. R. Nicholson, Wm. Sim and Allen Peirce are a committee appointed by the Park Street Market to assist in the entertainment of the C. S. A.

Lord & Burnham Co. have a contract to build a greenhouse for C. P. Grimmer, the Boylston street florist, at Jamaica Plain, Mass.

Elisha Nye Peirce, of Waltham, is very critically ill. The directorate of the Park Street Market met at Mr. Peirce's home on October 20 for a business meeting and stayed several hours. While their veteran host was far too ill to leave his couch, he greatly enjoyed the visit of his confreres.

William Sim is sending in some very fine chrysanthemums to the Park Street Market. Perry Green, of Quincy, has sent the best to the new market. John McFarland is shipping some good Bonnaffons taken from the crown bud to the latter place. The mignonette coming from Burgess and Cooney is fine and sells quickly.

Alexander Montgomery's new rose, Wellesley, in the way of La Detroit, is meeting with a quick sale at the high-class stores. There also appears to be a good call for Mme. Chatenay.

Galvin, Doyle, McMulkin and Wax Bros. are making orchids quite a feature in their window decorations. Cattleyas and Oncidium varicosum Rogersii are chiefly used.

W. B. Arnold, of the Rockland Greenhouses, has a fine striped sport from Lawson carnation which is a grand sight just now. They have some 2,000 plants and are booking many orders for it. This variety was certificated on January 30 in Boston.

McMulkin is using some fine Gros Colmar grapes in his window arrangements this week. He is also showing some fine Gloire de Lorraine begonias.

Doyle seems to have a monopoly of Bouvardia Humboldtii, sometimes called jasminiflora. This is a very old sort, but a first-class one. Anderson & Williams grow it in quantity.

The street fakirs are now feeling happy. With carnations at 6 and 8 cents a dozen, roses at 10 cents a dozen and chrysanthemums two for 5 cents, to say nothing of violets and cosmos, business is booming.

N. F. McCarthy & Co. had an auction sale of retinospora, taxus and other Dutch grown evergreens at their rooms on Hawley street on October 25.

NEWPORT, R. I.

Trade has been fair the past week, a few weddings, a few dinner decorations and some funeral work. Carnations are now coming quite good and plentiful, and retail for 75 cents a dozen. Other flowers show no especial change. No heavy frost to kill outdoor stuff as yet.

Chrysanthemums are coming better every day, but there will be no glut. Since we have had no chrysanthemum show here the private places have to a great extent stopped growing them, which gives the entire field to the florists.

Hitchings & Co. have about finished a fern house for R. L. Beekman. John Urquhart, the head gardener, will soon have a nice range of houses. The palm house built last spring was stocked by Leikens, who will also furnish the ferns needed.

Oscar Schultz has been doing an increasing business and has recently extended three of his houses some fifty feet each.

Florist Schultz took two of the four prizes at the recent show, for dinner table decorations.

A large quantity of hardy native rhododendrons have arrived for Reginald C. Vanderbilt's place.

Joseph G. Leikens has rented the store at 110 Bellevue avenue for the summer season of 1905.

The Newport Horticultural Society held its regular meeting October 19. President James J. Sullivan was in the chair. William J. Matson, gardener to Miss Alice Keteltas, was elected a member. It was voted to hold the annual ball sometime previous to December 1.

H. L. De Blois, the seedsman, has just returned from a ten days' vacation trip through the south with his wife, going as far as Norfolk, Va.

Bruce Butterton's new fern is being watched with much interest. It would seem to be excellent for large decorative work, as the fronds are so very large as compared with Adiantum cuneatum.

TEMPERATURES.

Will you please let me know through the REVIEW at what temperature asparagus and rhubarb can be grown in the same house? Could bottom heat be used successfully? Could beans and cauliflower be grown in one house?

B. P. T.

Asparagus requires a rather higher temperature than rhubarb, but if both are to be grown in one house they will do fairly well at a night temperature of 60 degrees.

Beans and cauliflower can both be grown in one house if a night temperature of 55 degrees is maintained. The beans would grow faster at a temperature of 60 degrees, but they will produce just as good a crop at 55 degrees, although the crop would, of course, take rather longer to mature.

W. S. CROYDON.

FORCING RHUBARB.

Before beginning to force this plant it is most essential that it be subjected to sufficient frost so that the clumps will be well frozen through. As it is necessary to lift the earliest batch before the frost is strong enough to penetrate to sufficient depth, the clumps had better be lifted and left on the surface of the ground for a night or two, where 10 to 12 degrees of frost will be sufficient to freeze them hard enough. Before the ground freezes too hard, all that are required for the winter supply should be lifted and stored where they can be conveniently reached when wanted. The clumps can either be placed in some building where it will be likely to freeze and, when covered up, will stay frozen, or piled up outdoors, subjected to just enough frost to freeze them through and then covered up well with straw or litter, so that they will stay just about as they are, neither freezing harder nor thawing out. Boards can be placed over the litter to shed the rains, or if these cannot conveniently be had, sufficient soil can be thrown over the pile to accomplish the purpose.

Rhubarb can be forced under greenhouse benches, but where it is intended to go into the forcing of this subject to any extent, it is better to have a place fixed up for this purpose. A frost-proof cellar with sufficient piping to maintain a temperature of 55 to 60 degrees is an ideal place, light being unnecessary.

Quite a good deal of soil will adhere to the roots and the clumps should be set together as close as they can be packed. Little covering will be necessary, but we use leaf-mold or similar light material to fill up the larger openings, so as to retain an equal moisture around the roots. For convenience in watering and picking the crop we place the clumps in beds four feet wide and leave sufficient space for one to walk between the beds.

Watering and dampening will have to be regulated according to the tendency of the atmosphere of the house. If this dries up rather quickly, frequent sprinkling will be necessary, possibly two or three times a day, as a moist atmosphere must always be maintained. The roots should be kept moist, but never heavily soaked, and after the growth is well started it can be strengthened by frequent applications of weak liquid manure.

In the gathering of the crop, experience is necessary to know just when it is at its best. The length will vary with the strength of the crowns. The idea is to get the stalks as long as possible, but yet while they are still crisp and firm, but if pulling is delayed too long they not only become tough and dry, but lose in weight.

After the best of the crop is gathered it does not pay to wait for the weaker stalks to gather strength, as they never amount to much, and it is best to pull them off and let them go for what they will bring, so that the spent roots can be removed and fresh ones put in the place they occupy. A TOUR AMONG CALIFORNIA SEED GROWERS.

Twenty-five years ago, in the middle west, it was thought that seed not branded with an eastern label was below standard. The few seed stores that our hustling western cities boasted of at that time were hardly more than agencies for eastern houses, and the majority of the market gardeners of these cities sent east for their seeds. Onion seed from New England and other favored points on the Atlantic coast was then considered the only safe stock. California seed was spoken of, but it was the bugbear of the gardener and although a shrewd few of the New England jobbers were "on" that it was all right and did not hesitate to secure good lumps of their stock from California, they took good care to brand it with their own eastern label before sending it back to the planters of the Mississippi Valley. It took years to overcome the feeling against California grown seed, not because of any prejudice in the matter, but on account of the well prepared early arguments of the eastern travelers that climatic conditions combined with the inexperience of the California growers precluded the possibility of producing a proper article there.

This is somewhat ancient history, but it will answer the purpose of calling attention to the photographic views printed herewith. We are indebted to C. C. Morse & Co., Santa Clara, Cal., for the originals of these views. They show parts of the Gilroy seed farm, one of the California ranches of this well known firm, and represent in a fair way the general appearance, at the stated times, of all the seed farms in that great seed-growing section of California that borders on the Pacific coast, from Los Angeles north to San Francisco, and up the river toward Sacramento.

A trip through the territory toward the end of June is a liberal education for a seedsman. He will note that the uniformity of the climate is one of the main reasons why seed crops are so successfully grown there. The grower may generally safely rely upon a certain kind of weather at a given time and can adjust his operations accordingly. The old idea that the climate of California is not suitable for the proper maturing of a vegetable and not safe for producing a reliable quality of seed, was based upon ignorance more than anything else. It is a fact that irrigation, when moisture is needed, and an almost dead certainty of dry weather to harvest the crop in, puts the California grower so far in advance of the grower who is up against uncertain weather for planting and harvesting that there is no chance of competition upon even terms. This applies to the general run of standard garden seeds, and when time has been given to the development of the resources of California it is likely that many of the specialties that are now thought to be best produced at other points will be grown in California just as well and more economically.

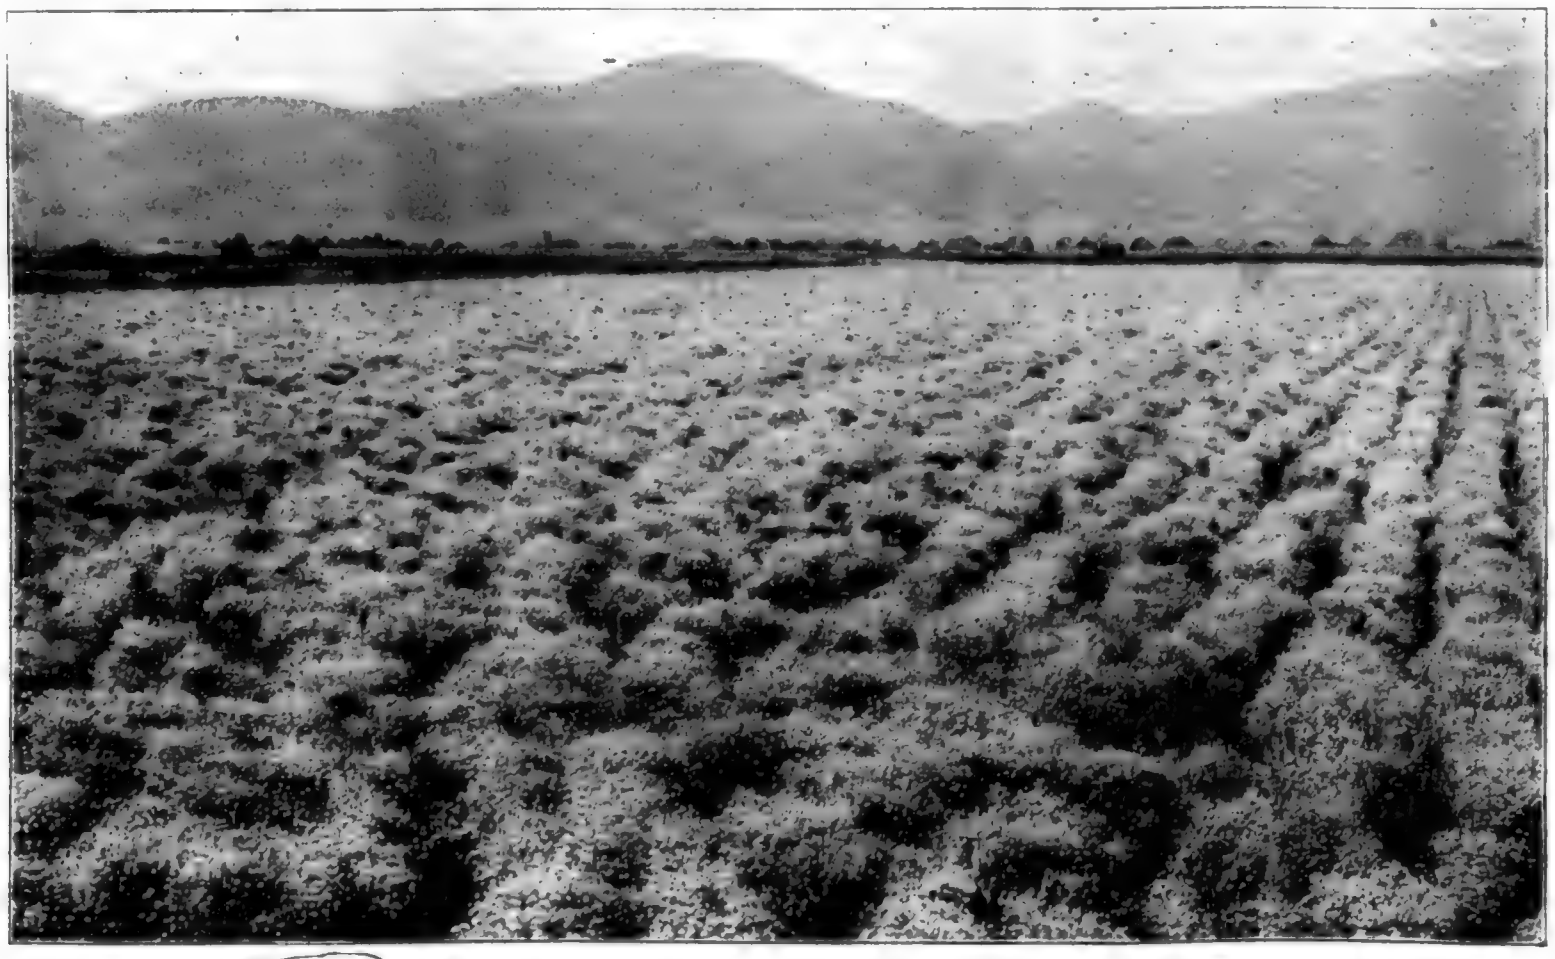
Beginning at San Diego and going north to Los Angeles there is not much to interest the seedsman except fields of sugar beet and some very extensive plantings of pole beans; 3,000 acres of beans on a ranch some twenty or thirty miles south of Los Angeles the writer was told was the largest planting in that neighborhood, and to look at it was certainly very extensive; nothing else could be seen on one side of the track but the bean vines, the sky and the mountains beyond. Having eaten a plate of Logan berries that morning for breakfast, and the delicious flavor of them being still with him, one of the party hoped that the 3,000 acres might be a crop of that fruit instead of beans. He did not know what sort of a plant Logan berries grew on, as they were new to him up to that morning. It is certain that no one should forget to call for Logan berries if he wants something that tastes good. These berries seem to be known only in California.

At Los Angeles there are some very nice seed stores, and the market gardens in the vicinity are well looked after and the produce abundant. Leaving Los Angeles on the Coast Line railroad, the next point of interest is Santa Paula. At this point it was somewhat cloudy and the writer asked if an umbrella would be a good thing to take along. The question was so unusual to the natives that a laugh was the only reply. Umbrellas are never needed there at that season of the year.

John Bodger & Sons are located at Santa Paula. They are large growers of tomato seed. Right up to the middle of December the vines yield fruits which contain seed. They grow pole beans and bush limas, lettuce, endive, pepper, egg plant and salsify. Flower seeds are also grown, aster being a specialty with them. They contract seed beans of the pole varieties with the farmers in their vicinity and do an extensive business in this line.

Between Santa Paula and Ventura is quite an extensive calla bulb grower. We drove from Santa Paula to Ventura along a fine macadamized road, which they sprinkle with oil. This method of sprinkling in a dry region is of great advantage. Ventura county is the principal section for commercial lima beans. A Mr. Levy, at Saticoy, operates considerably in this item, but at Ventura, however, is the main point for the California commercial lima and for other pole beans. J. K. Armsby & Co. are the largest operators in this line. They have offices in New York, Chicago and San Francisco.

Mrs. Theodosia B. Shepherd's flower garden at Ventura is worth all the time a seedsman can give to it. Many flower specialties of importance have been hybridized here and the information that can be gathered from the experts, who give it their attention is all the more interesting from being so cheerfully given.



Between Ventura and Arroyo Grande is what is termed the Lompoc district. Here many acres are given to pole beans and some of the growers farther north are interested in the crops of seed beans in this locality. At Arroyo Grande is located the Routzahn Seed Co. Oceana is the nearest railway station to the lower ranch of this firm. It is upon this ranch that the office and residence of the manager is situated. This company grows extensively onion, carrot, lettuce, salsify, pole beans, sweet peas, nasturtiums and nearly all varieties of flower seeds. On named varieties of nasturtiums and sweet peas they make a specialty. The ocean fogs have quite an influence upon the crops in this part of California. The knowledge that comes from experience as to what crops need the fogs and what do not and to place them accordingly on the different parts of the ranch, where fogs rest, and where they do not rest, is an asset of considerable value.

The Routzahn Seed Co. is successor to the McClure Seed Co. The change of name did not change the management, as Mr. Routzahn had been the active head of the McClure Co. Mr. Routzahn is given credit for being able to grow as large crops of sweet peas and other seeds, acre for acre, as any one in California. His location is exceptionally good, and his experience has been acquired at that one place only. The continued improvement and growth of the business is due to his energy and observation since starting there, as he had no previous training. The necessity of succeeding made success possible in his case.

A new company in seed growing has been started in the vicinity of Arroyo Grande by Edwin M. Haven, who until two years ago was a grower of seeds at Bloomingdale, Mich. Mr. Haven had quite a long experience in the east and expects to make a success of his California venture.

The next point of interest in the trip toward the north is Gilroy, whence came the pictures accompanying these notes. What is to be learned there, and farther on our tour of inspection, will be told next week.

Wood, Stubbs & Co., Louisville, Ky., have received a gold medal award on their exhibit of garden and field seeds in the Agriculture building at the St. Louis World's Fair.

The radish crops from Michigan so far delivered have yielded fairly well. The weather since harvest has been against speedy threshing operations and the average deliveries will be somewhat delayed.

Nels Swenson's onion set warehouse at Gen View, Ill., was destroyed by fire Sunday, October 23. Building and contents consisting of about 2,000 bushels, mostly yellows, were an entire loss. The sets were held for Peter Hollenbach, Chicago.

Beans as yet are an unknown quantity. The straw remains damp in many sections and threshing is far behind. Ordinarily a fair idea of what may be expected in the way of pro rata deliveries can be given at this date, but this year is to be an exception.

In several Wisconsin sections where peas ordinarily yield five to eight fold, they turn out only three and one-half to five fold this year. The wet weather since harvest has had much to do with this, the growers having had a serious time in keeping the peas from spoiling while in the straw.

Cucumber seed, notwithstanding favorable fall weather, dries out exceedingly light with all growers who have completed operations. Even the milling process, with the latest appliances for getting out the light seed, fails to bring out an up to standard sample.

An illustrated account of an eastern seedsman's tour of inspection among California seed growers is begun in this issue. Another installment will appear next week, covering the Santa Clara district, with accounts of the specialties and methods pursued at each place. If you receive a sample copy of this issue and want the rest of the story, send $1 at once.

Crenshaw Bros., Tampa, Fla., write as follows: "Owing to the dry weather we have experienced in the past few weeks the velvet bean crop will be cut somewhat shorter than was anticipated by growers, but, if no early cold, the crop will average that of last season. Prices will probably range in car load lots from $1.40 to $1.65. The melon seed crop harvested out this season better than was anticipated."

BRITISH SEEDS.

One of the principal European sources of supply on turnips, swede and beet, as well as some other things, is W. W. Johnson & Son, Boston, England. The manager, E. J. Deal, visited the principal dealers in the United States in the spring of 1903 with the result of largely increasing their business in this country and few American seedsmen visit England without spending a day on this firm's trial grounds at Boston. They do a very large trade with England's Australasian colonies, making shipments in large iron tanks in which the seed bags are packed and the tanks then hermetically sealed. Twenty-eight and one-half tons of turnip seed so packed, each tank weighing nearly a ton, were shipped to New Zealand last season.

SCOTCH PINKS.

Can grass or Scotch pinks be propagated at this time of year or are they best raised from seed and when?

C. U.

Grass or Scotch pinks, so called, are usually propagated by layers, usually in August, and the rooted stem can be removed to a new position in the following spring. As this is a true dianthus, as much as is our beautiful carnation, which roots readily in the fall, why should not the grass pinks also root? Little heat should be used, either top or bottom, and if you succeed in rooting them keep them very cool during winter.

The Market.

There is no mistake about it, business is certainly "on the bum." I have never seen stock move slower than it is doing at present. The growers are having the best of it, as the unusually warm weather, coupled with dry north winds, has made it a hard proposition to keep anything. Chrysanthemums are being offered by the hundreds of thousands and their quality is good, but the prices realized are very, very low. Some extra Bonnaffon today sold at $3 per hundred and they were as fine as it is possible to grow them outdoors. Of fancy indoor mums there is quite a quantity being used, but they are flowering at a poor time and the majority of the blooms do not bring over $1 per dozen. Roses are in good supply and, with the exception of Beauty, they are not bringing good prices. There are no good Beauties in market at present and such as we have wholesale at from $1 to $1.50 per dozen. Carnations are becoming more plentiful and the quality bids fair to be all right in a few weeks. The majority of the carnations offered at this time are cut from young stock that has just been transplanted indoors and the stems are stiff and short. Valley is selling at the same price quoted several days ago and there is only a fair demand for it. Outside stock is not very plentiful, as our season for hardy annuals and perennials is fast drawing to a close. Smilax is abundant.

Flowers, especially mums, are so plentiful that the street venders are selling bunches containing a dozen large, fine blooms for 25 cents. These are not flowers of poor quality, either, but just as good as is being sold in the stores. They are also handling the superabundance of carnations in the same way and bunches of very fair flowers can be purchased for 10 cents. Violets are not overplentiful and are selling wholesale at 75 cents per dozen bunches.

Various Notes.

John Vallance, manager of the plant department of the Cox Seed Co., has returned from a several weeks' vacation spent in Southern California. Mr. Vallance visited the principal nurseries and orchards during his trip and reports a very pleasant outing.

The San Mateo Floral Society will give an exhibition on October 28 and 29 in the Athletic Club building.

D. Greuttner, the pioneer nurseryman of Vallejo, has opened a floral establishment on Virginia street in that city.

James Sproule, formerly manager of the Sunset Seed and Plant Co., is in town. G.

HANDLING SEEDLINGS.

We are about to pass to that season of the year when great care must be exercised in handling seedlings that are yet in the seed boxes. I refer principally to hard wooded stock, such as pittosporum, acacia, pepper, palms, gum, cedars, pines and many other young plants. These are grown from seed, planted usually in the late spring or early summer, and by the present month should be big enough to transplant into flats or thumb pots. Some of the kinds I have mentioned we do not handle except in small pots and, as this will not be advisable before the early spring, the problem of keeping the young stock from damping off during the next four months is a serious one.

To begin with, the majority of growers plant the seed too thickly. I have seen 1,500 Acacia melonxylon transplanted from a flat 14x20 inches. This may be done in the fall if the weather is dry and plenty of sunshine, but I venture to say not one-tenth of them could be kept alive until January if allowed to remain in the bed. When a grower is not sure as to the germinating power of the seed he is planting it is, of course, well enough to seed the boxes heavily, but when the seed is fresh 300 is plenty to plant in the flats generally used here, about 14x20 inches. Even with this number of young trees in a box considerable care must be exercised to escape damping off. They must never be allowed to become thoroughly dry and be careful not to water during spells of bright sunshine if your stock is not shaded. And here is another trouble. Too much shade is fatal to the class of seedlings I am describing. If the watering is properly done, in the early morning or evening, the stock rarely wants any shade at all and will grow much heavier and stronger if plenty of light is always given.

We have had a very favorable autumn and there will not be much trouble until the arrival of dark, rainy weather, when it always becomes quite a problem to winter seedlings that have not been transplanted from seed flats. If the grower has plenty of house room it is well enough to risk potting up acacias, peppers, pittosporums and stock of that class, although there is nothing permanent to be gained by it unless the seedlings are too close together.

This young stock will have to be kept in the greenhouse until next spring, but with gums, cypress, cedars, pines, arborvitæs, etc., it is better to keep them out in the open, as they are perfectly hardy here. Small seedlings easily get too much water when kept outside in the rainy season and those that are only half hardy succumb to a superabundance of moisture as quickly as they do to an excess of frosty weather. The majority of seedlings should be transplanted into 3 or 4-inch pots when they are about one year old, and after that time they can generally be depended on to look after themselves regarding growing qualities. G.

We like the Review and expect to take it as long as we are in business.—C. D. Mills, Jacksonville, Fla.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., E. W. Kirkpatrick, McKinney, Tex.; Vice-Pres., C. L. Watrous, Des Moines; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 29th annual convention will be held at West Baden, Ind., June, 1905.

A LARGE contract for landscape work and planting at Highland Park cemetery, Cleveland, O., will be let soon.

A. S. PARMER, the venerable nurseryman residing near Springfield, Ill., was killed by an electric car October 16.

JOHN OWENS, Lexington, Ill., is establishing a three-acre aboretum, Joseph Irvine, a local nurseryman, supplying most of the stock.

T. V. MUNSON'S Housmann grape is reported as likely to give the southwest an opportunity to compete with the vineyards of western New York.

THE Thomas Meehan Horticultural Society, Germantown, Pa., elected the following officers October 12: President, W. J. Chandler; vice-president, S. N. Baxter; secretary, Ernest Hemming.

THE considerable amount of business booked compelled many nurserymen to begin planting several weeks ago, stripping the leaves from such subjects as can be handled that way, for in most sections the stock is still in almost full leafage.

THE fine Indian summer weather has not had the approval of the nurserymen. Not only has the stock refused to stop growing, but some things have flowered again. It promises to cut the planting season short and a sudden freeze might leave the storage houses empty.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

The stores this week had one of those periods of ups and downs. There were some good orders floating around and you would find some busy one day and some another, but most of them complained of having had some very poor days. The shop windows are largely decorated with mums and autumn leaves, which are very beautiful this fall. The chrysanthemum season is now on in earnest.

Various Notes.

H. C. Frick opened his conservatories at his residence in the east end to the public Sunday, and they will be open to all visitors until the mum season is over. The grand display of orchids and chrysanthemums reflects much credit on David Frazier, the gardener, and was appreciated by the many visitors.

Superintendent Geo. Burke, of Schenley park, has had his force busily engaged for a week arranging the chrysanthemum display at the Phipps conservatory. The stock is said to be in excellent condition, although owing to the warm weather they have come out much earlier than expected. The show will open October 30 instead of one week later, as intended. This is always a grand show and is one of the fall features of this city. The railroads run excursions during the show and thousands of people from a distance take advantage of them to visit these beautiful conservatories and are well repaid.

Superintendent Wm. Hamilton will open his chrysanthemum show at the Phipps conservatory, Allegheny park, October 30, and Jas. Moore, the foreman, is getting things in shape for a treat for the Alleghenians. Beside the mums he will also have a house of orchids in bloom and one of begonias. The splendid weather we have had has also brought this show on one week earlier than was intended. These three shows are gotten up on a grand scale and among them one can find specimens of almost any variety worthy of cultivation, and as they are arranged with other plants in the most artistic manner, one should see them all.

The war of carnations still goes on in the Liberty Market. According to an evening paper last Saturday the market was crowded with flower buyers taking advantage of the cheap flowers, as carnations were still selling two dozen for 25 cents and chrysanthemums 50 cents per dozen.

The writer, in his notes of October 13, made mention of the dahlias John Bader saw in California, and as Mr. Bader takes exceptions to the size which I mentioned, 30 inches in diameter, I wish to correct myself. What Mr. Bader really said was that he saw larger dahlias in California than he has seen in this country or in Europe.

We had the first light snow flurry Saturday, October 22. The day was one of the miserable kind and had its effect on business.

Wm. Loew and Jos. Jones have opened a new cut flower store on Diamond street and, as they are both well known, should make it a success.

The Greeks are bobbing up here and there with flower stands and I presume by the time the season is really on we will have enough to satisfy all demands.

Al. Sheapard's familiar face can be seen in the Liberty Flower Market stand, wrapping them up in good shape.

H. T. Miller, of Salem, O., was one of the visitors this week. Hoo-Hoo.

I HAVE certainly been well pleased with the REVIEW and would not like to be without it; I think every florist should take it.—C. L. SHANKS, Newton, Kan.

I LIKE the REVIEW and would not be without it. The only reason I did not advertise in it this season was that local trade took all the stock; did not have enough and had to buy through the advertisements in the REVIEW; that's where to look for what you want.—J. A. KENISTON, Newburyport, Mass.

DORCHESTER, MASS.

Some time during the night of September 23 some party or parties entered the T. H. Meade greenhouses, on Wrentham street, Dorchester, which are now conducted by the L. H. Foster estate, breaking open the cellar door, and also the door into the potting shed. They were not content with breaking into the place, but deliberately performed a most dastardly act by deliberately punching a large hole in a No. 6 Weathered boiler which had been fitted with new grates and was all ready for firing up. The employes of the place cannot see how any stranger could have entered, as a dog is kept there every night and he has no use for strangers, so they are convinced that it must be some one well acquainted with the dog and the place who committed the malicious act.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

There is not a great deal of life in business as yet. The weather is warm and plenty of flowers outdoors.. A good frost would help the trade along. Lots of stock is coming into the market. Some very fine chrysanthemums are to be seen and roses are of good quality. Beauties take the lead, as usual. Carnations are not as yet plentiful, owing to the excessive heat we are having, but the prospects are bright.

Jacob Schulz's carnations will be a sight when they come into bloom. They are looking fine.

Jos. Coenen & Co. had a wedding decoration this week. Lots of roses and smilax were used.

The A. Heitz place is in fine order. He will have a fine lot of pot mums for All Saints' day.

Henry Fuchs has just completed putting in a steam boiler and has added two more houses to his plant.

Leo Zeller, formerly with Jacob Schulz, has started in business. He will grow carnations chiefly.

A. Baumer is making a handsome display in his show window of roses and cut chrysanthemums. August knows how to go at it.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Haupt have returned from their long trip to the Golden Gate and enjoyed it ever so much.

F. Walker & Co. are building a greenhouse in the rear of their store for palms and ferns.

C. W. Reimers, of Crescent Hill, is sending in some very fine American Beauties and chrysanthemums.

On Sunday, October 16, a party of florists, consisting of Jos. Coenen, Jno. Bohrman, Fred Schulz, Hy. Fuchs, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Werth and Hy. Lichtefeld, made a trip to Cincinnati, took dinner at Rigg's and after dinner took a car at Fountain Square out to Lockland and visited the establishment of W. K. Partridge. We found the gentleman at home on his beautiful place. Through the kindness of Mr. Partridge the party was shown through the different houses. His roses and carnations are a picture of health. Here was seen a red seedling carnation which took the eye of everyone and made a good impression. It was a bright red and had a good stem and large flowers. HY. LICHTEFELD.

MINNEAPOLIS.

L. S. Donaldson has bought the R. J. Mendenhall greenhouses and the real estate used in connection with the business. Mr. Mendenhall has been in the business forty-five years. The sale marks his retirement from business after being a resident of Minneapolis since 1856.

Mr. Donaldson secures the greenhouses and property on First avenue S. between Eighteenth and Nineteenth, and running through to Stevens avenue. He will immediately put the stock on the market. The greenhouses will be closed out. What the improvements to the property will be has not been determined, but they will be extensive.

WEST SUPERIOR, WIS.—James S. Marshall is making extensive repairs and improvements in his greenhouses on Hughitt avenue.

LARWILL, IND.—F. A. Knull has just added another house 10x65. He grows lettuce, pot plants and mums and has a prosperous trade.

DENVER.

The Market.

Colorado climate at this time of year is very notional and climatic influences, to a great extent, regulate the demand for and values of flowers. Up to October 18 the weather has been very favorable to the production of outdoor flowers and such material has been more beautiful than at earlier stages of the summer; consequently the sale of greenhouse stuff has been rather slow and the supply, except carnations, has been far in excess of the demand. The sale of cut mums up to date has been very satisfactory to some of the dealers who have been fortunate enough to dispose of their Robinsons, Monrovias and other early varieties long before they were anywhere near developed. Aspect of greenhouse and other favorable conditions have enabled some growers to clean out their whole crop of early varieties before others think of starting to cut the same varieties. True, such cuts were of that soft character that, if not disposed of at once by the retailer, are a great loss to him and, if sold, a great disappointment to his patrons, but the grower is satisfied, as the flowers brought as good prices in this condition as the perfect flowers will at a later date, when there is a surplus.

Various Notes.

The Park Floral Co. has a mum house which is very promising. The new pink, Wm. Duckham, is behaving itself very well, sturdy growth with no inclination to weaken at the neck or sacrifice its equilibrium for the sake of the blossom. Perhaps some will think it is too stiff in growth. Its compact growth and dense foliage would lead one to hope for a good pot variety and fill a want long felt.

Many of the florists out here have been allowing themselves to think that Glory of Pacific was all right, which it is as far as earliness is concerned, but its familiarity has bred contempt and many have concluded to banish it. Ben Boldt's plants of this variety were magnificent, but color and form of flower were against them.

Pot mums are now occupying a large portion of the growers' attention and prominent positions in the retailers stores. Considering the character of the stock and the large supply on hand, the prospects for a profitable and quick clean-up are not very encouraging. Quality has been sacrificed for quantity and all interested, from the grower to the retailer, will have to suffer the consequences.

Lilium speciosum, both album and rubrum, has been grown here for several years as a pot plant with very satisfactory results, more for cut flowers than otherwise. Flowering at a time when choice flowers are scarce makes them of special value for decorations and other work. The smaller flowers make up nicely into bouquets for bridal parties. They are much admired on account of their orchid-like appearance.

Mahler is now furnishing the market with fair violets, considering the unfavorable weather we have had.

Fred Hall is supplying the retailers with a fine lot of Libertie, and Scott considers them the best roses of this type and color on the market.

Sam Lundy, who is a Denver product, but for some years past floral artist for Geo. Fleischer, of Pueblo, paid this city a flying visit last week.

Emil Glauber has just returned from a month's visit to his old home on the Atlantic seaboard.

Grimes and Mauff put in a few weeks recently at the World's Fair and seem well satisfied with everything excepting floral interests. Great Divide.

Lower Sawatara, Pa.—Aaron Brandt is building a greenhouse.

Crete, Ill.—G. Heinrich is offering to rent or sell the Crete Greenhouses, although he does not care to dispose of the real estate, intending to go into the nursery business. The location is a good one for either purpose, as there is a good trade and no competition for many miles.

JOLIET, ILL.

There are to be three big flower shows in the west this year, Chicago, St. Louis and Joliet. November 2 to 5 are the dates of the Joliet show. Cut chrysanthemums and plants must be in position by noon of the opening day, cut roses on Thursday, carnations on Friday. Exhibits are solicited. Here are some of the premiums offered: For best forty varieties chrysanthemums, $50; twelve white, light pink, dark pink, yellow and red, $6 for each. Carnations, best fifty each, white, light pink, dark pink, crimson, scarlet, yellow, variegated, $5 and $2. Best 100 blooms any variety, cut glass vase valued at $25. A gold medal is offered for twenty-five blooms of an undisseminated American rose. For twenty-five Beauties $15 is offered; for twenty-five Liberty $10, and for each of the other varieties $5.

Entries should be addressed to Chas. A. Noble, secretary, and exhibits sent to Jas. Hartshorne, at chrysanthemum show, Joliet.

The invitation sent by our bowling team has been accepted by the Chicago Florists' Club bowling team. The match will take place November 5. The Improvement Association, under whose auspices the flower show is held, has put up a prize. A banquet will be given the visiting florists in the Elk's Club. It is expected a large crowd will be down from Chicago, as there certainly were some "doings" the last time they were here. We still have the same mayor, boys.

Florists' Review

DETROIT.

It has been some time since any Detroit notes have appeared in the columns of the REVIEW, but your scribe has been so busy that he has had neither time nor inclination to take his pen in hand, but the florists of this city and vicinity are an easy-going lot anyway and it takes a convention or a hail storm to arouse them, or one of the "Great Scott" parables. Everyone is prepared for a good winter's business and praying that we may not have another cold winter like the last one.

The past week or ten days of sunshine and warmth have rushed the stock forward so that the retailers have not been able to care for it, especially roses and mums, but cooler weather has now set in and better returns are looked for. Carnations are looking fine, with very little disease, the bulk of the plantings being Lawson and it looks as if another year it would still be Lawson, for White Lawson looks as promising as the parent.

On Thursday, October 27, the Michigan Cut Flower Exchange will keep open house in the new home, which is as finely fitted for the business as any commission house in the country.

President Breitmeyer is very enthusiastic over the World's Fair flower show and it will be a grand success if his work can make it so.

The annual outing to Mt. Clemens takes place on Friday, October 28, and I will try and give your readers a few notes on how stock looks in the Bath City.

GLAD HE CAN SAY SO.

Lenox, Mass.

My opinion of its value is that I have never found anything equal to it in pungency, and therefore efficacy. As a Tobacco Powder it is ahead of any other I have used, and am pleased to be able to say so. See page 1147.

GEO. T. PHILCOX.

Are all flower growers liars?

SURELY this cannot be true; well, we have over 100 growers who have written us, a large majority without request, their opinions; we publish a few of these letters in the columns of this paper; see on pages 1046-55-56-59, what they say about the FUMIGATING KIND TOBACCO POWDER. All began with a five-pound trial bag at our expense, which gave them an opportunity without cost to prove its GOODNESS and our assertion that it was the most effective, cleanest and quickest, as well as cheapest (10 cents per 100-foot house) article to fumigate with, and that all kinds of aphis can be killed in one night. Let us send you a five-pound trial bag by express, it will cost you nothing but the express charges on it, and be convinced that what your brother growers say of it is true. Our booklet tells of it; we mail it on request.

PIPING A HOUSE.

I am building a greenhouse 20x32 feet, three-quarter span and sixteen feet to ridge. The gables are glass and there is eighteen inches of glass in the south wall. The door is at the east end and a four-foot bench extends all around the house save for the entrance and door to the boiler room, with a wide bench in the center. The boiler sets three feet below the walks and about one-third of the way from the east end. I want to heat with water and must have 55 to 60 degrees in zero weather. How shall I pipe the house? C. L. P.

This house can be heated by carrying a 2-inch riser from the boiler to a point under the ridge, then in both directions to the west and to the east ends of the house. At the west end bring the flow under the bench and divide it into three 2-inch pipes and arrange them in two coils, one to go north and return under the north bench to the boiler, the other coil to go to the south and terminate in a manifold near the door at the east end. From this manifold run one 2-inch pipe under the walk to the boiler.

If it is desirable to place heat under the short bench at the east end of the house and between the entrance and the door to the boiler shed it can be provided by a short three-pipe coil taken from the riser carried to the east end of the house, or it might be heated by an independent riser taken directly from the boiler.

Another plan of piping might be provided. The riser from the boiler might, if it is desirable to have all the heat under the benches, be taken from the boiler through the wall and under the north bench to the west end, across the west end and along the south side and to the doorway on the east end and there divide into three 2-inch returns to return under the benches by the same course. This will provide a little more radiation than the first mentioned plan and would enable the house to be held at from 65 to 70 degrees in cold weather. L. C. C.

South Bend, Ind., April 4, 1904.
"Superior to any Hot Water Boiler we have ever used. You certainly have placed the right name to your Boilers; no effort at all to keep the temperature at desired points when zero weather comes. Night after night the past severe winter weather gave your Boiler a good test. We are more than pleased with the Superior Boiler." Yours truly, Treanor & Rettie.

VENTILATION.

The excellent weather we are having should be taken full advantage of to get our stock into good winter condition. There is now every opportunity to give ample ventilation, both night and day, and no chance should be missed, as the season is not far off when these opportunities will be few and far between.

The rose, as we know it, being neither a tropical nor a greenhouse plant, but strictly a native of temperate climes, is only introduced into our houses with a view to prolonging and changing its season of blooming, and requires, as near as we can possibly make it, the conditions and temperature prevailing in its native habitat when nature is in its most pleasant mood. We should bear in mind that by confining our rose plants to the house we are depriving them of the free, fresh air which they enjoy in a state of nature, and if we neglect to provide for them they must suffer and die.

An insufficiency of air supply will soon cause even the most robust plants to lose their vitality, a fact which will soon be evidenced by the poor quality of foliage produced. This soon becomes thin and flabby, with a sickly green color, and becomes susceptible to all kinds of diseases and trouble. Being lacking in vitality, the stock is unable to make any headway against it.

To enable us to supply our stock with fresh air in suitable quantities and to create a free circulation we provide our houses with ventilators of the most approved patterns, yet many of the less experienced growers use these only to let the superfluous heat of the sun escape. A little consideration, study and practice will, in most cases, convince these growers that it is more profitable to ventilate freely, even at the expense of a larger coal bill, and not allow the ventilators to remain closed one minute longer than necessary.

The true art of ventilation, as practiced by our expert growers, consists of gradually raising or lowering the ventilators as exigencies demand, without raising or lowering the temperature. Thus, if the thermometer shows a temperature of 62 degrees at 7 a. m., with a tendency to rise, the sash should be raised just so far as to allow the temperature to remain at that figure, without falling below it. As the temperature still continues to rise, the ventilators should be raised accordingly, but never so much at a time as to lower the temperature.

During the afternoon, when reduction becomes necessary, the same care should be used so that after each reduction the temperature should not increase.

Night ventilation requires quite as much attention to insure success and should be given freely when the weather is mild, and even during very cold weather a small crack of air is essential to keep up a good circulation.

By strictly adhering to this practice we secure a better class of foliage, foliage which is almost immune from the ravages of mildew, a better stem and blooms of superior size, shape, color and quality, with a smaller per centage of malformed buds. The keeping qualities of the flowers will also be considerably enhanced. The vigor and vitality imparted to the plant, enabling it to withstand disease, will repay the extra cost of fuel required.

RIBES.

POOR SOIL TO BLAME.

I have sent you a sample rose bush and soil which I would be pleased to have you examine. The cutting was propagated in January, when ready potted in a 2½-inch pot, and so on. On August 30 it was planted in a side bed in the rose house, in one half of which is planted Perle and the other half Bride and Bridesmaid. The Perles are fine but many of the latter are no good at all. Please give me your opinion of the cause of the trouble. A. B.

The specimen rose sent is about the poorest I have ever had to pass an opinion on and I would not expect much better from the class of soil in which it was grown.

It is against the best cultural methods to put rooted cuttings into 2½-inch pots for a first potting, 2-inch pots being large enough, even for Beauty cuttings, if they are potted as they should be, before the roots become too large.

Deferring the planting till August 30 is not giving even a robust plant any kind of a show, the very best of the growing season being practically over by that time. The old and well defined limit of July 4 usually sees the finish of rose planting.

The soil is of a very poor character and not at all suitable for rose culture, there being really nothing in it to sustain the plant with the exception of the small nodules of clay interspersed through it and to which the roots have clung as their only protection against final extinction.

If the rest of the roses are like the sample there is certainly no hope of ever getting returns from them. I may also point out that the foliage bears unmistakable evidence of neglected ventilation. A careful study of this art will repay the grower.

Perles will stand more abuse in the matter of ventilation, poor soil and neglect, than will Brides and Maids and will look a little better under similar conditions. Try a night temperature of 56 degrees, with a good crack of air on and allow the day temperature to rise as high as 70 degrees during bright sunshine and ventilate freely. Do not allow the plants to suffer from want of water, as this sample has evidently done, and do not attempt to feed until the plants have attained a vigorous growth.

RIBES.

CARNATION NOTES.—EAST.

Mulching.

As stated last week, in notes on the advisability of mulching, the procedure with stock grown under glass all summer will not be the same as with that grown in the field, lifted and benched. It stands to reason that bench soil in which stock has been growing all summer is not in the same mechanical condition as fresh soil, into which nearly or quite mature plants have recently been put. The repeated and at times heavy watering necessary during the hot weather, together with the spread of root system, will have done much to change this condition.

It will be noticed, when supplying water, how quickly it disappears, particularly when the surface soil has not recently been broken up. This indicates that the root system has spread to such extent as to honeycomb the soil, so to speak, allowing water when applied to take a more direct downward course. This is the natural result of healthy gowth, but the quantity and depth of soil in the bench being limited, this extension of root system cannot go on always without assistance. To be sure, it is not according to the best methods of culture that it should continue as in the summer, still there must be some growth of roots.

Feeding with liquid manure will not accomplish the desired result, besides it is too early yet to feed. While a top dressing might be a help, the exact object sought would not be attained. A mulch, however, will serve a double purpose: Add fertility to the bench soil and encourage further growth of roots.

It is quite probable that these indoor plants are now giving a supply of bloom so the careful removal of some of the surface soil, when on the dry side, will result in no harm but will allow for the application of a heavier mulch. Particular conditions, however, may favor two light mulches rather than one heavy one.

In any case use fresh soil and fairly well rotted manure, with a sprinkling of air-slaked lime, Follow the removal of bench soil immediately with the application of the mulch, watering at once if weather and time of day will permit. Geo. S. Osborn.

CARNATION NOTES.—WEST.

Insects and Feeding.

Now that you have commenced firing you will have to be even more watchful than you have been during the last two or three months. There are more dangers lurking, ready to attack the plants, than before. The one pest which firing seems to favor more than any other is red spider. In the out-of-way corners, where the steam pipes run close to the plants, they will breed and multiply by the million and unless you are constantly looking for them and fighting them they will soon spread over a whole bed or house. A plant that is badly infested with red spider is in poor shape to go through a hard winter and come out in good condition. To have your plants in perfect health at this date is the main thing, much more essential than to be cutting lots of blooms this early. There is a long season ahead for cutting blooms, but the good weather for building up a strong, healthy plant is nearly over now. What you have failed to do along that line up to now cannot be made up. Your winter's crop is either made or ruined by this time, as far as the strength and health of the plants can affect it.

Green fly seem to flourish, too, after firing commences, and regular fumigating is necessary to keep them down. Best of all, do not allow them to appear at all. Thrips, too, will show in white spots on the pink and red varieties. Lawson is one of their favorite varieties. Spray about once each week in the morning of a bright day with Tobak-ine liquid to keep these two pests in subjection, especially the latter.

Examine the soil each morning to find the dry places. You will find, along the south edges and where the steam pipes are close, much more water is needed than in the middle or on the north sides of the beds. If your beds are raised, and especially if there be heating pipes underneath, you should dig down to the bottom occasionally and examine the soil clear to the bottom. If you water properly, it will not dry out at the bottom without being dry at the surface. Water only the dry spots until the whole bed is dry enough to take a thorough soaking, and then wet it clear through. If you have mulched the beds you will have to be all the more careful in examining, as you can tell nothing about the soil by the appearance of the manure.

There are a few varieties which we rather not mulch at this season of the year, because it retards evaporation too much. Such varieties as Flora Hill, Innocence and a few others which are troubled more or less in winter with bacteria, seem to do better without mulching. They like to run on the dry side a good deal. Keep the liquid food away from them, too, until toward spring. In fact, don't be in a hurry about the feeding, anyway. If your soil was good the plants will have plenty of nourishment to draw from except perhaps for a little wood-ashes to stiffen the stems or a little lime to sweeten the soil.

Soil for Next Season.

If it is possible to do so, it will pay you to select your soil for next season before the fall rains set in. It need not necessarily be a plot of sod, but it should be good, strong soil, which lies rather high. Soil from a piece of land that lies high will not sour so quickly as that from low land. Plow it deeply and let it lie as rough as possible. Spread over it a good coat of manure toward spring, after it has frozen thoroughly, and plow again as early as possible in the spring. If the soil is of a heavy nature, use stable straw manure, but if it is rather light, you would better use cow manure. If you cannot follow this method, you will do well to have the soil hauled to your place this fall and put in a pile, not too high to prevent the frost from penetrating through it. In the spring you can turn it again and pile it up a little more, if you like, and by midsummer you will have good soil to plant in. A. F. J. Baur.

VARIETIES TO GROW.

I wish to buy some field-grown carnation plants, deep red, pink and white, also variegated. I want fairly prolific varieties. Will you please advise me what will be best in Georgia? T. W.

If you are a beginner I would advise you to get a good assortment of varieties to begin with. One or two varieties in each color is all right for a man who knows the varieties, knows just how to handle them, and knows just what his market demands. You are in a much warmer climate, too, than ours, and varieties which are best here may not do at all in your locality. Warm-blooded varieties ought to prove best for you, but you will have to experiment and find out for yourself. Try Crane, America and Estelle for red; Mrs. Lawson, Ethel Crocker and Floriana for pink; Flora Hill, Queen Louise and Gov. Wolcott for white. Prosperity might come white for you most of the season. Viola Allen, Marshall Field and Mrs. Bradt are all good striped ones. I might add Enchantress to the pink class. I did not include any of last spring's novelties, as most of them are strangers to me except what I have been able to see of them thus far this season. Although most of them look very promising, yet we can say but little until later in the season.

A. F. J. Baur.

CARNATION SOCIETY PREMIUMS

The preliminary program and premium list for the fourteenth annual meeting of the American Carnation Society, at Chicago, January 28 and 29, has been issued. Essays already arranged for are by Prof. Hasselbring, George Wienhoeber, Fred Lemon and C. L. Washburn.

The premium list is much as in other years. Class A, open to all, offers premiums for 100 blooms of $10 and $6. Class C is open to all varieties disseminated prior to July 1, 1903, fifty blooms, premiums $5 and $3. Class D is open to all varieties disseminated prior to July 1, 1902, twenty-five blooms, $3 and $1.50. In each class the color divisions are white, daybreak pink, Lawson pink, Scott pink; scarlet, crimson, yellow variegated, white variegated; "any other color."

Special prizes are offered for fifty blooms Wm. Scott, for best fifty blooms in the hall, for best 100 Adonis, for Gov. Lowndes, Genevieve Lord and Norway, and for fifty blooms Crusader. There is a sweepstakes for the best vase in the class for 100 and also for the best vase of fifty.

The Lawson medals will be given, as usual, the gold medal for the best 100 any color, the silver medal for the second best, and the bronze medal for the third best. The S. A. F. silver medal will be awarded to the best vase of fifty blooms of an undisseminated variety, the bronze medal for the second best.

ORIENTAL POPPY.

How and when should plants be taken from the oriental poppy? I. E. B.

The oriental poppy may be divided in fall or spring, but as it is late now I would advise waiting until early spring. This poppy is also easily raised from seed sown in small pots in spring, so that when planted the roots will not be disturbed more than is absolutely necessary, as all poppies are difficult to transplant.

W. S.

CUT WORMS.

Can any reader of the REVIEW give a good method of catching cut worms in greenhouse benches besides hand picking? I have tried several ways to poison them, to no avail, and have to hunt for them after dark at night, sitting up after usual hours for bed, waiting for them to come out of their hiding places. Of course I understand that they bury themselves just under the soil in the daytime, and have gone over the benches very carefully and concluded that we had caught them all, but when evening came there seemed to be as many as ever. We get rid of them after a while, but you can't get them all in one night and they soon do lots of damage to carnation and chrysanthemum buds. S. F. P.

The only effective way of disposing of cut worms of which we know is hand picking. It has always been effective in our experience, although, like every other detail of successful cut flower growing, it takes time, which some growers would rather give to billiards. B. B.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

CHRYSANTHEMUM STUDIES.

Tasteful Effect With Ordinary Material.

To use ordinary, every-day material with the aid of a good setting is the thought of to-day's study. No attempt is made here to exhibit fine, large flowers, but we have tried to show how commonplace material may be carefully and effectively put together. This is even more important than if the flowers were magnificent from the standpoint of quality and quantity—and, by the way, the smaller arrangements are much more easily adapted to some definite form than is a great bunch or vase of American Beauties or huge chrysanthemums. To be able to display extra fine stock when occasion requires is one and the same thing as to be able to arrange a handful of flowers attractively in a tiny vase.

The feature, then, of these arrangements is the employment of native flowers and foliage with the chrysanthemums. It is nonsense that it injures the sale of greenhouse stock to advocate the use of outdoor summer stock or autumn foliage. Of course, any one who cannot look six months ahead is apt to settle on this conclusion. But when one stops to think that the use of such material creates a need that must be supplied later on from greenhouse stock, when the time comes that the woods and fields cannot furnish the flowers, it is a long-sighted policy to advise the use of such material and spend some time in planning and decorating with it. Besides, it fills a want that cannot be supplied, either in variety or quantity, from a greenhouse.

A common fault with florists, especially those who are also growers, is to exhibit fine stock indifferently as to arrangement, thereby doing no credit to it as such. The only way to have the knack of arrangement at your fingers' ends, when auspicious occasions demand it, is to cultivate the habit of considering the best setting and arrangement for every half-dozen flowers that are ever put together. In short, think.

One of the greatest differences between these two vases is in the coloring, which of course is not apparent in the illustrations. The brown stone jar is the receptacle used in both. In the first illustration yellow and white chrysanthemums, the white being much in excess, are used. A spray of bittersweet, three or four stalks of milkweed pods, with their shell-like hulls of gray and yellowish cream bursting into silken clouds of brown and white parachutes, against a spray of yellowed chestnut leaves, complete the study.

The next is a picture in white and gray and crimson. The same creamy white chrysanthemums, without the yellow, are used, with spikes of wild sage, a few bunches of a berry resembling blackhaw, with crimson oak leaves. The last element of coloring is what saves this color scheme from a cold effect, the gray and white with the black not having rich enough warm effect for autumn. The first study is more suitable for a table centerpiece than the second. The latter however could be used if shortened. It might be well to add a setting of oak leaves under the dish in accord with the coloring of the second vase. Care is used in these studies to keep the proportion of colors quite unequal, the white predominating in both, and the other colors being introduced in various small unequal quantities.

WORLD'S FAIR FLOWER SHOW.

Every indication points to the greatest flower show ever held in this country at the St. Louis World's Fair next week. The executive committee is more than pleased with the interest manifested on all sides and at the whole-hearted way in which the trade at large is responding to the invitation to participate in this great exhibition. The St. Louis contingent is doing its full share and all arrangements are complete for staging the exhibition and caring for everybody who may have any interests there. Arrangements have been perfected for the transportation of exhibits arriving at St. Louis so that there shall be no delay and all details of advertising and handling the admissions have been perfected.

The requests for special tags and labels of the Department of Horticulture have come from all sections of the country and assure a wealth of exhibits which will tax the ingenuity of the manager in their proper arrangement. It looks as though the show will be considerably larger than any ever held in point of extent of exhibits.

At a meeting of the executive committee of the World's Fair Flower Show Association last week the matter of caring for trade visitors at the show was very fully discussed. It was decided that a section of the conservatory near the office be set apart for desks and a register. It was requested that the trade papers invite all trade visitors at the Fair to arrange their sightseeing so as to be present at the office in the conservatory each forenoon and afternoon to meet each other. The meeting hour for the morning was set at 10 o'clock and for the afternoon 4:30. It is believed that by giving these arrangements wide publicity all florists, seedsmen and nurserymen attending the show and desiring to meet others whom they know to be present can very conveniently arrange appointments at these hours and no one need be lost on the grounds for any length of time.

There was another meeting of the executive committee at Chicago Monday afternoon, at which action was taken on all final details save those which must be reserved for action at a meeting to be held in St. Louis next Saturday.

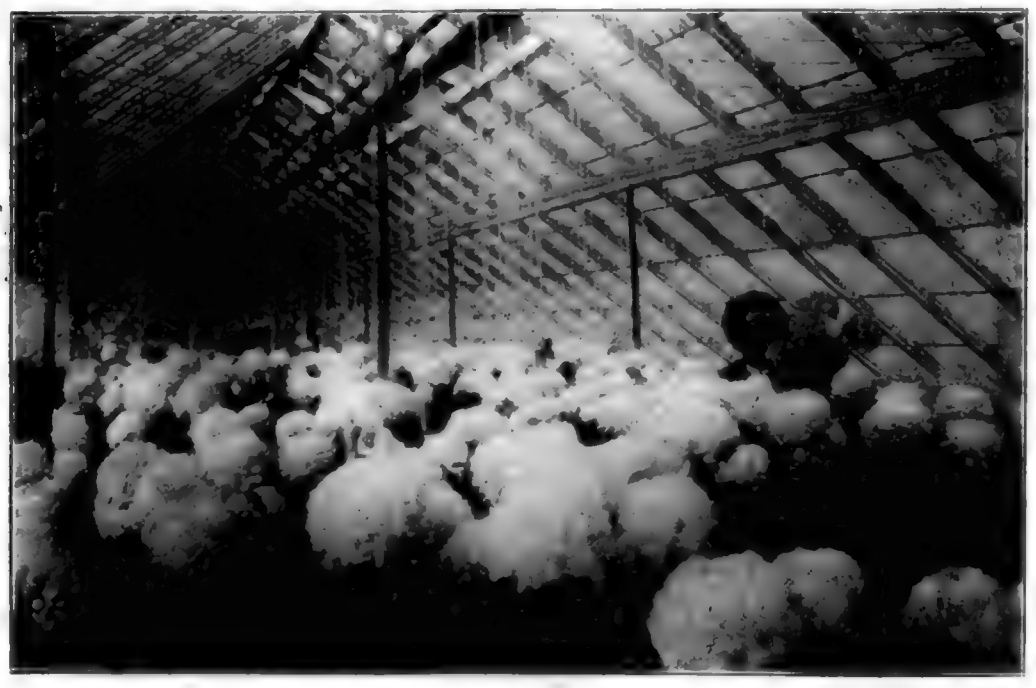
It was voted to amend the premium list so that seedlings might be admitted to compete in the classes for 100 cut chrysanthemum blooms, white, yellow and pink, the premiums for each color being $75, $50 and $25. These are classes 23, 24 and 25 in the list.

A class was added for floral arrangements, fifty blooms chrysanthemums, one vase, not less than ten varieties, $40, $25 and $15.

An additional class has been provided in the premium list for 100 Mme. Chatenay roses, $40, $30 and $20.

At the last Chicago meeting of the executive committee Chief Taylor telephoned from St. Louis advising that one of the regular World's Fair bands of music would be available for the show, that President Francis would open the exhibition at 2:30 p. m., Monday, November 7, the show to continue open day and evening as arranged; that the expediting of express and freight matter inside the grounds had been arranged by the teams belonging to the Horticultural Department. The publicity department has posted liberal signs on various buildings of the Fair and the coming show is much talked about. Mr. Taylor stated he was extending a general invitation to florists, nurserymen and all horticulturists at the Fair and those visiting the show to be present at the horticultural meeting to be held in the Hall of Agriculture, Agricultural Building, World's Fair, Thursday afternoon at 3:00 o'clock of the week of the show. Prof. William Trelease will likely preside.

Souvenir postal cards have been ordered for immediate sale, open to order from the trade and for sale during the show with the posters.



Manager Hauswirth has gone to St. Louis to make his office in the Horticulture building until after the show.

The program of the show is to be printed with advertising in two colors, the first edition 20,000 copies, the cover a reproduction of the poster.

Special Notice.

All trade visitors are requested to identify themselves and register for the courtesies of the association.

Exhibitors and guarantors will find their passes at Room E, of Chief Taylor's office, in the south end of the Agricultural building.

Ivory Chrysanthemums Grown by Livingston Seed Co., Columbus, Ohio.

MADISON, N. J.

The ninth annual show of the Morris County Horticultural Society was held on October 27 and 28, and was, as usual, distinguished by the high average quality of the exhibits staged, the old champions, Messrs. Duckham and Herrington, being this year re-enforced by some new blood, notably Messrs. Fraser, Herremans and Thomas.

The chief attractions were the chrysanthemums and there was hardly a poor flower in the entire exhibition. In the premier prize for thirty-six flowers in six varieties, long stem, the old rivals, Messrs. Duckham and Herrington, fought it out as usual, with the award in favor of Mr. Duckham, who set up Maynell, Nellie Pockett, F. S. Vallis, Ben Wells, Donald McLeod and W. H. Etherington. Mr. Herrington's flowers, which were also of superb quality, were Cheltoni, Ben Wells, W. Duckham, F. S. Vallis, H. J. Jones and Jennie Falconer.

In the class for eighteen flowers in three varieties Mr. Herrington was first. His vases were Appleton, W. Duckham and Cheltoni. For twelve flowers in four varieties Peter Duff was first, R. Vince second. For ten white, A. Herrington was first, with Mrs. Neville, also for ten yellow, with Cheltoni.

For twelve flowers in twelve varieties, 12-inch stems, set up in small vases, James Fraser was first. He also won the special prize for ten pink, with ten magnificent flowers of Wm. Duckham. For six flowers in six varieties, first was won by Peter Duff, with James Fraser second. F. S. Vallis, Mrs. E. Thirkell, Merza and Nellie Pockett showed up very finely in this class.

For six flowers, any variety, first was won by R. Vince, with a splendid vase of Lady Hopetoun, James Fraser being second.

For ten flowers in five varieties, first was won by W. H. Thomas, with Mr. Fraser second. On six pink conditions were reversed, with Mr. Fraser first, with splendid W. Duckham, Mr. Thomas being second.

For six white, Mr. Herremans was first, with Weeks as finely finished as we ever saw this variety, O. H. Kock being second. In six yellow, Mr. Herremans was again first, with Mrs. Thirkell, James Fraser second. The latter gentleman was easily first for six any color, with very fine F. A. Cobbold.

For six flowers, 1903 introductions, Mr. Herrington was first, also for six flowers of current year's introduction; his varieties being Maynell, W. Duckham, Ben Wells, F. A. Cobbold, Harrison Dick and Mary Inglis. In the class for 1903 introductions, Mr. Thomas showed the largest flower in the show, F. S. Vallis, a monster, indeed.

In the pompon classes John N. May was first and Geo. Bird second, and for the vase of flowers arranged for effect Mr. Fraser scored an easy first.

The rose classes were not so well filled as usual, most of the growers claiming that it was too early in the season for them. Though the quality of those exhibited was very fine, the number of exhibitors in these classes was a disgrace when one considers the number of rose growers in this section. L. A. Noe was the principal winner, taking first for eighteen Beauties and twelve Beauties, Mr. Hentz being second in the latter class. He also won for twenty-five Brides and twenty-five Maids, L. B. Coddington coming second in each class. F. L. Moore won for twelve Maids, with L. A. Noe second. L. M. Noe was first for twelve Bride, with L. A. Noe second.

In carnations the special prize of R. and J. Farquhar for twenty-five flowers was won by W. Duckham, with Prosperity, R. Vince second, with Enchantress. In three varieties, twelve flowers of each, Mr. Herremans was first, with James Fraser second. Several fine vases of carnations were awarded certificates, C. W. Ward's varieties being Robt. Craig, Ethel Ward and Lieutenant Peary. John E. Haines exhibited his new red, named after himself, and John N. May set up Phyllis.

In the violet classes Mr. Fraser scored first for 100 doubles, Mr. Herremans second. For 100 singles Peter Duff was first, W. H. Thomas second.

In the group classes Mr. Herremans was first, W. H. Thomas second, both having fine exhibits. For twelve single-stemmed plants in 6-inch pots, Peter Duff won, with a very handsome, uniform lot.

The vegetable classes were not so well filled as usual, but the quality was fine, Mr. Herremans securing the Peter Henderson prize and J. Downing the Thorburn prize. Best collection of apples went to Mr. Fraser and the celery prize to W. Duckham.

In the miscellaneous exhibits Mr. Herremans was awarded a certificate for a fine exhibit of grapes, hot house grown, and Lager & Hurrell and W. H. Thomas for two beautiful tables of orchids. Certificates were also awarded to the new Pierson fern, Rose Mme. Levavasseur and to R. Vincent, Jr., & Son for an extensive exhibit of pompons.

The hall was handsomely decorated with magnificent specimens of palms and foliage plants from the greenhouses of H. McK. Twombly, A. Herrington, gardener, and D. Willis James, W. Duckham, gardener, and the show as a whole was a very decided success, artistically, financially and otherwise. The weather was fine and the attendance broke all previous records. Out-of-town visitors were numerous, many of the shining lights of the horticultural world making a flying visit to see and be seen, and the management has every reason to be satisfied with its labors. The judges were Wm. Scott, Tarrytown, N. Y.; Wm. Turner, Oceanic, N. J., and James Blair, Staatsburg, N Y., and their work was accurate and painstaking. B. B.

TWO NEW ENGLAND ESTATES.

On October 31 the garden committee of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society inspected the rose, carnation and chrysanthemum houses of E. A. Clarke, Jamaica Plain, Mass., where W. A. Riggs presides. The place was in apple-pie order. In chrysanthemums Mr. Riggs has a fine selection of the newer sorts and they are well grown.

A Battles Touch.

In pinks W. A. Etherington had the largest flowers, but Wm. Duckham had a better color and would appear to be a better all-around variety. Mrs. Geo. Mileham had a perfectly finished flower. In yellow, F. S. Vallis headed the list, of the same shade of color as Mrs. T. W. Pockett, but with larger flowers, petals longer and more graceful. General Hutton had fine flowers, but a rather long neck. Mary Inglis, a yellow buff, proved rather disappointing. Mrs. E. Thirkell had fine flowers, but rather poor foliage. C. J. Salter, of Bonnaffon shade, was good, a little too early for the exhibitions. In reds, Maynell was fine, ahead of S. T. Wright. Lady Roberts was not in the same class. Mrs. F. W. Vallis was not up to expectations, but will be tried again. W. R. Church promised some grand flowers. In whites Mr. Riggs has found nothing yet to beat Merza. Ben Wells lacked substance to make it an ideal flower. J. H. Doyle and Mrs. A. Miller were good terra cotta varieties. They made fine single-stem pot plants. Of the older sorts we noted fine blooms of Appleton, Eaton, Viviand-Morel, Lady Hanham, Mutual Friend, Nellie Pockett, Ethel Fitzroy, T. W. Pockett, H. J. Jones, Mrs. Jerome Jones and others. A grand lot of plants in pots was also seen.

In roses the varieties grown are Beauty, Bride, Bridesmaid, Mrs. J. P. Morgan, Wootton and La Detroit. Next year the new Wellesley will be grown as Mr, Riggs considers it ideal in color, fragrance, stem and size of flower. Enchantress was easily the finest carnation. Other sorts doing well were Harlowarden, Flamingo, The Queen, Mrs. Patten and Lawson. Fine batches of cyclamens, calceolarias and other plants were coming along. The committee was well entertained by Mr. Riggs.

On November 1 the E. S. Converse estate in Malden was the rallying ground for the committee. After lunch with Mr. Roy the superintendent, the greenhouses were inspected, main interest being taken in the largest house of chrysanthemum plants in pots arranged for effect. The specimen plants were numerous and remarkably fine. A. J. Balfour was superb, as were W. H. Pierson, Black Hawk, Mrs. Freeman, Ivory, Mrs. J. R. Tranter and others. In the anemone-flowered class Garza and Red Robin were the best, Savannah leading in pompons. The single varieties of the Mizpah type are grown in quantity and are ideal decorative plants.

A house of single stems contained a beautiful lot of blooms. Particularly good were Wm. Duckham, F. S. Vallis, Mrs. J. C. Neville, Merza, Yellow Eaton, W. R. Church, Donald McLeod, General Hutton and A. J. Balfour. In roses Bride, Bridesmaid and Golden Gate are grown, while Enchantress, Challenger, Lawson, Fair Maid and Boston Market were the popular carnations. In the various houses inspected fine batches of Lorraine begonias, primulas, cyclamens, poinsettias, cinerarias and other plants were coming along, all reflecting great credit to Mr. Roy. W. N. CRAIG.

A VISIT AT THORN HEDGE.

The invitation of H. H. Battles, the widely known Philadelphia retail florist, to visit his country place a short time ago, was accepted by Samuel S. Pennock, the wholesale florist of that city; John McIntyre, the buyer of that city, and Phil, representing the florists' paper of that city and the country. The trio went out by way of Market street, past Jacob Becker's new show house at Fifty-second street and Wm. C. Smith's latest improvement at Sixtieth, to Sixty-third street, where they changed to the West Chester trolleys. The ride from this point lay through a beautiful country, full of early associations to Mr. Pennock, who pointed out many spots of special interest.

Mr. Battles' carriage met the party and took them first to the farm, where some fine country, some pink and brown grunters and a flock of Rhode Island reds, somewhat resembling brown leghorns but with brighter hackles and saddle feathers, oddly enough unknown to the gentleman from Westerly. The only other incident before reaching Thorn Hedge was due to a quiet-looking grey horse that was working in a field near the road. This animal had taken a most unexpected night trip to New Jersey just before Phil's last visit. He had been with difficulty located and induced to return. A very interesting collection of minerals, neatly arranged in a cabinet, and another of moths and butterflies, were examined with interest, Mr. Pennock giving some interesting accounts of the latter.

A walk about the grounds followed. A handsome bed of Colorado blue spruce was much admired. There are quite a lot of Rex begonias in variety and a great number of small ferns in 2-inch pots, chiefly pteris, for use in fern dishes. During the winter in this house the valley is forced. About 100,000 will be flowered this year.

The next house was planted with Asparagus Sprengeri in the center bench, Cibotium Schiedei being grown on pedestals over the asparagus. The side benches were planted with Asparagus plumosus. The next two houses are devoted to Adiantum Farleyense. It would be hard to find a finer lot of plants. They present a beautiful sight, the large specimens being perfect in form and foliage. Some are planted out in the bench for cut sprays. These are full of vigor. Another house is entirely filled with Carnation Mrs. Lawson, the plants being benched from 3-inch pots early in the summer. They have grown luxuriantly, showing that broad, bluish foliage that denotes vigor. Sweet alyssum growing in the edge of the carnation benches adds to the revenue of the house.

The last house was entirely filled with Euphrobia Poinsettiana grown on benches for cutting, the center bench nearly filled with hard-wood plants now over three feet high, the side benches with plants from soft-wood cuttings, very dwarf, all with luxuriant foliage. Both the carnation and poinsettia houses have ventilators on both sides as well as two sets at the ridge. Great quantities of cosmos were being packed for shipping in to "One hundred and eight."

A large block of California privet from two to five feet high shows the confidence felt in the future of this effective hedge plant.

H. H. Battles' Service House at Thorn Hedge.

large beds of shrubbery used for cut flowers in the spring and many handsome evergreens. The view from the house over the beautiful valley to the hills beyond, with Media in the distance, is very fine.

The greenhouses were next visited. Here the trio were met by the manager, Frank S. Jackson, and his assistant, Henry Parr, who showed them through. The first house was devoted chiefly to ferns and palms. Asplenium Nidus Avis is given considerable space and is here in all sizes. Cibotium Schiedei is grown chiefly for cutting. There is Every successful business must have intelligent workers to conduct each department. In Henry Bauer, Frank Gaul, Frank S. Jackson, John McIntyre, Henry Parr and George Rust, Mr. Battles has an exceptionally fine corp of assistants. PHIL.

OBITUARY.

Elisha Nye Peirce.

In the passing away of Elisha Nye Peirce on October 30, after a long and painful illness, borne with extreme fortitude, New England loses one of her leading florists and Massachusetts a man who was respected by all who knew him. Mr. Peirce's death was not unexpected, as his condition for some time has been very critical. The disease from which he died was cancer of the stomach, from which he has been a patient martyr for a long time.

Born in West Medford, Mass., on August 21, 1839, the son of Major Moses Peirce, he was educated in the town school and also in A. K. Hathaway's classical school in that place. He enlisted in Company E, Fifth Massachusetts, and was present at the first battle of Bull Run. His first enlistment ended, he re-enlisted in Company E, Thirty-ninth Massachusetts, but was never mustered into that company, as he was appointed second lieutenant in Company E, Fifth regiment. Later he was transferred to the United States Signal Corps and served under Generals Hunter and Foster as staff officer. At the time of his death he held quite a number of prominent positions in the G. A. R.

Mr. Peirce's ancestors first settled in Watertown, Mass., in 1630, and from that time to this all have been engaged in agricultural pursuits, the present generation being the first to add horticulture to its calling. While the deceased was a full-fledged military man in every sense, and loved nothing better than to relate his civil war experiences, in which period he was thrice wounded, he was always called by his neighbors Farmer Peirce, and loved the title. While at one time vegetable growing was extensively followed, of late years a large area of glass has been built and tomatoes are now the only vegetable grown. The staples of the firm have been carnations, chrysanthemums, Asparagus Sprengeri, Easter lilies and spiræa, all of which are grown in big quantities and are mostly disposed of at the Park Street Flower Market, of which the deceased was one of the directors, having been unanimously re-elected on October 22 last. Mr. Peirce was also a member of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society and took an active interest in everything pertaining to the welfare of his native town.

A unique character, as a plain speaker he was well known in horticultural as well as in Grand Army circles, and everything he said proved his solidity and thoughtfulness. Everything he undertook was done thoroughly and his death will be deplored for many a long day by the many who were privileged to be among his acquaintances.

Mr. Peirce often said he would rather be called Farmer Peirce than a college professor. His was a noted figure at the town meetings years ago, and he was one of the leaders in all debates. Two sons were identified with him in the business and one daughter survives him. Funeral services were held on November 1 at his late home, Waltham, and was very largely attended, many of his confreres at the Park Street Market being included, and many other members of the craft. The Grand Army was largely represented also, the funeral being of a military character. The floral souvenirs were many and beautiful.

DETROIT.

An Auspicious Opening.

On last Thursday the opening of the Michigan Cut Flower Exchange took place in its new quarters, a trade exhibit being a feature. The show of chrysanthemums, roses, carnations and plants was a most excellent one, there being exhibits of many new carnations and roses from out-of-town growers. The Thompson Carnation Co. sent Carnation Robert Craig. The Chicago Carnation Co. sent Fiancee and Cardinal. Nathan Smith & Son, a new seedling chrysanthemum, James Hartshorne. Elmer Smith, Henry Smith, James Hartshorne and Eli Cross were present and several other out-of-town visitors helped to make the occasion a very enjoyable one. Detroit can now boast of as commodious and well-arranged commission house as there is in the country, and if trade, in keeping with its facilities, can be secured it will be a grand success. Mr. Dilger, the manager, lives in the building, so that he can be reached twenty-four hours of the day by phone, and he is willing to get out of bed any hour of the night to take an order.

Trip to Mt. Clemens.

On October 28 the florists of Detroit and vicinity, on invitation of the craft in Mt. Clemens, visited that city by special car. There was sixty-five in the party. A stop was made at the greenhouses of J. F. Sullivan, where everything looked like new, for the place has been repainted throughout. The stock was in fine condition, two houses of Lilium Harrisii looking extra fine and showing very little disease. Mr. Sullivan has also painted and redecorated his store, so has both his places of business in fine shape.

At the Breitmeyers' the stop was all too short to do justice to the excellent lunch and the fine stock. In roses a bench of 1,000 Liberty showed to what perfection this rose can be grown when properly handled, and right alongside of it were 3,000 La Detroit, with every shoot crowned with a bud. A lesson was learned in the use of a carbon paint for iron. Here about ten feet of pipe at the ends of the two houses of La Detroit were painted, the fumes from which killed all the new growth in one night, thus putting back the plants for two months at least. The carnations were a revelation, for never since the establishment of the plant have they been as fine at this season of the year. The plants are large and bushy, with stems and blooms fit for the carnation exhibit in February. This is from Fred: "White Lawson and Queen for quantity and quality. Lady Bountiful is a close second in white, and the more I see of Flamingo the better I think of it. Nelson Fisher is also a winner." The chrysanthemums are, as usual, very fine, but most noticeable were the two new ones, which the firm bought last year from the originator, H. W. Rieman, viz., Majestic and Adelia, the color being a snow-white from center to circumference, with stem and foliage all that could be desired. The varieties are Japanese incurved and it was the opinion of all that some extra fine flowers would have to be staged to beat it out at the shows this fall. Houses of anemone and pompons and snapdragon were interesting.

Robt. Klagge, the violet king, has abrogated the title and descended from the throne, for he says "the black-fly is now trying to finish up what the gall-fly left of the violet plants." He has some very promising seedlings in carnations, one being a white, of which he has 500 plants. Morning Glory is still grown here and at the place of Stevens Bros., across the way, and are fine at both places. Messrs. Stevens also grow violets and had the best we had yet seen. At Jas. Taylor's the truth of the old adage, "A man cannot serve two masters," was verified, for while the new dwelling being erected was perfection, the greenhouses were not quite up to their usual high standard of excellence, but Jim will get there yet, for he is a worker and will clean up before snow flies.

At J. E. Carey's were found the best violets in town, clean and healthy, the record showing a good cut to the present time. A short stop was made at Von Boeselager's new place and an introduction to the new wife and a lunch concluded the day's hard work, but withal a most enjoyable one, also a profitable one, for such visits awaken the spirit of emulation. The visits could be made much more profitable to the visitors if made in smaller numbers, say two or three, and much more often and also more profitable to those visited, for I heard one florist say at Breitmeyers': "Gee, it must cost something to wet this crowd." Adiantum Farleyense at Thorn Hedge.

BALTIMORE, MD.

Business continues to improve. This week has started off quite satisfactorily. Monday was an exceptionally good day, it being Halloween doubtless causing part of the demand. Much stock was used for All Saints' decorations. Now that the weather has become sufficiently cold to finish up about all the outdoor stock, we may look for general advancement in the trade. All the retailers have a more cheerful look. Chrysanthemums are in good supply and of good quality. Whites are selling best. Last week pink was very slow to move at any price until Saturday, when they were unloaded to the market and street merchants at a somewhat reduced figure. The top price for the very best is $2.50 per dozen. A few of the very earliest brought $3. The average is about $1.50 for good stock. Roses are going at from $3 to $5 per hundred. Carnations $1 to $1.50. The stock is generally good.

W. J. Halliday will soon move to his new store on Charles street, opposite his old stand, having secured a handsome store just being completed.

C. E. Smith & Co., 121 North Liberty street, are improving their store. They are also adding the property in the rear, which will be converted into a large conservatory connecting with the main store. A. F.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Conditions have not changed materially from a week ago, prices remaining about the same all around and the market has continued to clean out satisfactorily. The output of chrysanthemums has now reached its flood-tide. In whites there has been quite a scarcity, very little but Ivory being procurable. Such varieties as Appleton, Mutual Friend, Bonnaffon and Merza are now coming in. The high-class stores display a number of fancy blooms, those from Waban Conservatories being superb. In pinks some nice lots of Duckham and A. J. Balfour are noticeable, also a few of Dr. Enguehard, which latter seems likely to be a fine commercial sort.

Roses are abundant and of improving quality. Carnations still bring $3 per hundred, for fancies, ordinary grades running as low as $1. Violets are now of fine size and color. Princess of Wales is the leader, as is Enchantress among carnations. Prices average about 50 cents per hundred on violets. A slightly hardening tendency is noticed in green stock, a heavier call being noted.

Plans for the Show.

The numerous entries received assure us the finest chrysanthemum show ever held in Boston. The committee of arrangements has decorated the large hall very tastefully and Messrs. Farquhar, Cameron and Wheeler have put a lot of valuable time on this part of their work. It is evident that all available space will be needed to accommodate the various exhibits.

Some of the leading exhibitors are: Waban Conservatories, J. Breitmeyer's Sons, Chicago Carnation Co., J. D. Thompson Carnation Co., A. Herrington, Miss E. J. Clark, E S. Converse, E. W. Converse, J. S. Bailey, H. Dumaresq, M. A. Patten & Co., Peter Fisher, Wm. Nicholson, William Sim, F. L. Ames estate, E. A. Clarke, Lager & Hurrell, Thomas Dolliber, Commodore M. F. Plant, Mrs. J. L. Gardner, Farquhar & Co., S. J. Goddard, J. E. Rothwell, Nathan Smith & Son and E. G. Hill Co.

The banquet to be tendered the visiting members of the C. S. A. will be held at the Hotel Thorndike on November 4, after the business session at Horticultural Hall. Invitations have been extended to Governor Bates, Mayor P. A. Collins and other notables.

Committee Goes Visiting.

The garden committee of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society has been kept very busy of late, visiting various estates where greenhouses had been entered for competition. On October 28 they left Boston in the 9 a. m. express for New London, Conn. They were met upon arrival by Thomas W. Head, superintendent of the M. F. Plant estate. A pleasant ride of a few miles down the Thames River was much enjoyed, the big freighter Dakota, the largest freight steamer in the world, being passed en route to the private pier on the Plant estate. After lunch with Mr. Head, the committee made a tour of the extensive greenhouses and estate.

On October 31 the rose, carnation and chrysanthemum houses of E. A. Clarke, Jamaica Plain, where Wm. A. Riggs presides, were inspected. The committee found the houses in apple-pie order. On November 1 the E. S. Converse estate at Malden was visited. Mr. Roy, the superintendent, received the committee very hospitably. Chrysanthemum plants in pots are very fine here.

Field Day at Waban.

On October 29 members of the Boston Gardeners' and Florists' Club had a field day at the Waban Conservatories on invitation of Alexander Montgomery. Some of the party went in automobiles, the remainder by steam and electric cars. On arrival a complete tour of the extensive greenhouses was made under the guidance of the two Alexander Montgomerys, senior and junior. The numerous rose houses were all in splendid condition, the Beauties, Brides, Bridesmaids, Morgans, Liberties and other sorts grown by the thousands being as near perfection as it is possible for them to be.

Very great interest was shown in the large house of Wellesley, Mr. Montgomery's new seedling. This was a wonderful sight, thousands of blooms being in view. Part of the house is planted with grafted stock, the balance with own-root plants, the former showing a slight advantage so far. Stems four to five feet long can be cut at this date, and there is a big call for the flowers at the high-class stores. Mr. Montgomery has not yet disclosed the parentage, but that he has a sterling novelty all who see it must concede.

The houses of single-stemmed chrysanthemums were of great interest to the visitors. They contain the cream of the new and older sorts and command the best prices at the Boston stores. Last season Mr. Montgomery got $8 per dozen for that grand late variety, Mrs. Jerome Jones. A variety which appealed very strongly to all present was Mlle. Marie Liger. Other varieties which Mr. Montgomery thinks well of are: William Duckham, Dr. Enguehard, General Hutton, Charles Langley, Ben Wells, Miss J. Barwood, C. J. Salter and Mrs. J. C. Neville. Of the older sorts Mrs. J. Jones, Mrs. T. L. Park, Eaton, Appleton, Maud Dean, Merza and Kate Broomhead are favorites.

After a complete inspection of the whole plant, boiler room included, an adjournment was made to the roomy potting shed, where sandwiches, coffee, ice-cream and other refreshments were served. Before the party left, J. A. Pettigrew, in the name of the club, tendered the thanks of the members to Mr. Montgomery for their kind entertainment. The members gave three cheers and a tiger for their generous host and closed with singing "He's a Jolly Good Fellow."

Various Notes.

After leaving Waban Conservatories a portion of the party journeyed to the new establishment of John Barr, at South Natick. All his carnation houses looked first class, being a mass of bloom. The Queen, one of Mr. Barr's introductions, was splendid. Other kinds well grown were Enchantress, Fair Maid, Lawson, Harry Fenn and Mrs. M. A. Patten. Some very promising seedlings are also under trial. Everything on the place was in the pink of condition.

F. W. Fletcher of Auburndale has a fine yellow chrysanthemum, a seedling from J. E. Lager, which he has named Easigold, in season from October 8 to 12, which has sold finely. It is a splendid commercial variety and likely to become very popular. W. N. Craig.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The market, which looked very promising on Saturday, experienced the regular Monday setback, which of late has become chronic and prices settled down to the low figures of last week. In fact, the dealers have become reconciled to the belief that improvement need not be looked for as permanent until after election.

There are some magnificent chrysanthemums in the market, none finer even at the exhibitions, where only the best are considered. Ivory never was so fine as this year. Appleton has arrived in grand and perfect form. Duckham is king of them all in size. Little wonder carnations have retired for a time and have to be satisfied with serious declines in value, and the quality, too, is superb.

Beauties do not advance except in quality and orchids remain below standard prices. Violets found a ready sale on Saturday, when Yale sent its football contingent to do battle, but this week sees prices down again, top prices reaching 50 cents with difficulty.

Various Notes.

A. H. Langjahr is handling some especially fine Ivory. This is his thirteenth year in the wholesale business and not being superstitious he expects it to be his best. He is reaching out for shipping trade successfully. Arthur Hunt, his foreman, had a severe tussle with a highwayman on Sunday evening in Astoria. He saved his watch and money but was severely marked by the scoundrel before his rescue.

George Clarke, of Portland, one of the Clarke Bros., is visiting New York. E. Bernard, of San Diego, Cal., another traveler from the woolly west, is here, his specialties being roses, olives and ornamentals.

Dreyer & Keller, joint owners of the new white carnation, Bertha Rath, are sending fine stock of it to the Cut Flower Exchange, which is exclusively handled by Frank Millang.

Guttman & Weber's new red carnation has been christened Victory. Mr. Guttman will exhibit it this week at the Boston show.

Kreshover has moved his branch in the Coogan building to the former office of the Cut Flower Exchange, where light and facilities are much improved. The new ice box of the Exchange will be erected in his former quarters. All of the prominent growers of the company have signed a petition to the L. I. R. R. for the restoration of the early train from Port Washington via Bayside and Great Neck, with almost certain prospects of a favorable decision.

The gold medal of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition has been awarded to John Scott, of Brooklyn, for his exhibit of Scottii. Beaulieu, of Woodhaven, the pansy man, has been awarded a silver medal for his patent hose supporter.

C. W. Ward returned on Friday from Europe, after a pleasant journey, having spent September and October on the continent.

Charles Koch, of Flatbush, escaped a watery grave about fifty feet above ground when he fell into his water tank. Fortunately a ladder made rescue possible.

In the Herald on Sunday appeared a long interview with the manager of the Waldorf-Astoria, in which among other "facts" appeared the statement that "our florist's bill is $50,000 a year." J. H. Small & Sons have a handsome branch store and do the entire decorating for the hotel. While the figures will perhaps come in the line of "news" to many of the trade, even in this city of magnificent prodigality, the statement of "mine host" does not seem at all improbable.

Lion & Wertheimer have a novelty in the shape of a flower and foliage combination, which they call the "messaline glace chagneaut" ribbon, for which they report an unprecedented demand.

At the funeral of the Rev. Dr. Lorimer last week, some very handsome designs were sent from Twenty-eighth street. One especially, a wreath of laurel and pink heather, from one of the wholesalers, a member of his congregation, being unique and appropriate.

Stumpp & Walter, H. H. Berger & Co., Suzuki & Iida, Elliott, Thorburn, Joosten, Henderson, R. M. Ward & Co., the Clucas & Boddington Co., and Arthur Boddington all have the same story to tell. They say it has been an exceptionally good season.

Thorley's latest accompaniment to the chrysanthemum display in his stores is a profusion of wicker baskets, suggestive of accommodation for the largest blooms, though otherwise unattractive.

McConnell had a charming window of yellow chrysanthemums and orchids on Saturday that the Fifth avenue pedestrians found it worth while to pause and admire.

At Wadley & Smyth's the entire force has returned from Newport and at Leikens', on East Thirty-third, the new ice box has been installed and the opening business has been very satisfactory to the proprietor.

David Clarke's Sons are rejoicing in opening of the subway and are celebrating by a profuse daily decoration in their enormous store, a station at their very doors making special conveniences for their numerous patrons.

November 15 will see the season's final exhibit of chrysanthemums in New York, at the rooms of the New York Florists' Club in the Grand Opera House building. There should be no delay in notifying President Traendly or Secretary Young by exhibitors. It is planned to make this a gala night. Many florists from other cities will be here on account of the big flower show of the American Institute, which will be the longest if not the best on record, extending from November 10 to 17.

President Traendly, Vice President Butterfield and Messrs. Sheridan, O'Mara, Nugent and Shaw, of the New York Florists' Club, were visitors at Madison, on the first day of the exhibition last week. Chas. H. Totty, of the executive committee, was absent owing to the death of the father of Mrs. Totty.

J. AUSTIN SHAW.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The retail trade is much benefited by cooler weather. While trade is better than last year at this date it is not entirely up to expectations. We had quite a frost the past week, which killed all tender outdoor plants. A few of the up-town florists report a busy week in all kinds of work and especially funeral work. Quite a number of social affairs are on tap for this week at the World's Fair and no doubt a lot of first-class stock will be used. The florists in the west end who have fine show houses are stocked up with fine blooming plants of all kinds and especially chrysanthemums, which gives them very attractive showings.

The quality of the stock at the three wholesale houses is good, but select grades are limited in quantity. Extra select Carnot, Liberty and Kaiserin bring $8 per hundred. On Bride, Maid, Meteor and Perle the prices are from $5 to $6. Seconds and thirds in these run from $1 to $3. American Beauties of the extra quality are still scarce for the demand, at $4 and $5 per dozen. Good Beauties can be bought for $2 and $3. Others run from 5 to 10 cents each.

The demand for carnations is big. Everybody wants select stock, while common stock is generally left over. The stock in Lawson, Enchantress, White Cloud, Estelle, Wolcott and Joost is coming in fine and when extra choice sells at sight for $2 and $3 per hundred. Lawson is coming with longer stems, which helps to sell it.

It strikes us that the demand for chrysanthemums is very good and especially for medium sized blooms. Fancy stock is slow in coming to this market. Good white has the call at $3 per dozen. Those left are generally yellow or pink. We are promised some extra fine specimen blooms this week, which will be welcomed by those who keep first-class stock. Violets are selling well and are much better. Some extra fine doubles were seen at Kuehn's last week at $1 per hundred. Californias are 50 cents. Choice stock is limited at present to standing orders, which are quite heavy.

Cosmos and tuberoses are still coming in limited quantity. All other outdoor stock was killed by the heavy frost of the past week. Good smilax is coming in freely and sells well at 15 cents per string. Extra fine adiantum is to be had at $1.25 per hundred.

Various Notes.

Ed Kalisch, of the firm of Kalisch & Sons, was married the past week. Congratulations are now in order.

A. Berdan, of Kirkwood, is sending F. M. Ellis Paper Whites which are really fancy for this time of the year.

James W. Dunford is sending in a fine cut of roses from his place at Clayton.

The Schuerman Floral Co. will again decorate the Coliseum for the horse show the latter part of this month.

Fred Ammann, of Edwardsville, is sending in an extra fine lot of Chatenay roses to Kuehn's. His Beauties and other roses are up to their usual standard. Fred expects to be in it at the big show next week.

G. Kruse, in South St. Louis, reports business good. He has a fine lot of Boston ferns which he is selling to the west end florists.

The floral clock at the World's Fair looks dilapidated since the frost killed all the coleus which were used for the figures.

Fred Weber and James Arata had to do jury duty the past week, which was not much to their liking.

The local craft is much pleased to learn through the REVIEW that Messrs. Herrington, Duckham and Rudd are to be the judges at the World's Fair flower show. All three have many personal friends among the craft here. The local florists are all taking a great interest in the big show and it will be no fault of ours if the show should not be a success. Phil Hauswirth is expected this week to take up his headquarters in the Horticulture building and hold meetings with the local committee. Your scribe paid a visit to the grounds on Friday and found all hands busy in the conservatory, making preparations for housing the big show. J. H. Hadkinson, the superintendent, says everything will be made comfortable for all the visiting florists and that he will render all assistance to make all feel like home.

Dan Newsham is busy packing up his palms at the World's Fair ready for shipment to New Orleans this week. Dan says he will return for the big show.

President Juengel says that the club meeting next Thursday afternoon, November 10, at 2 o'clock, will be open to all visiting florists. They are especially invited to take part in our proceedings. The members should come out in full force. There will be cigars to burn, if that will help any.

Fred Foster and Alex. Siegel had a great time of it on Sunday, having the street fakirs arrested, as an order has been issued by the city officials that street fakirs must vacate. Fred took several rides personally in the patrol wagon with his victims to see that they were safely locked up in the hold over.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

Fred Ehret sized up the market conditions exactly this week when he said: "I can't sell enough flowers." There is plenty of business on most days but a tremendous supply of stock that will accumulate at times, in spite of the most heroic efforts. Among the best chrysanthemums this week are Appleton, Balfour, Bonnaffon, Byron, Coombes, Eaton, Halliday, Ivory, Shaw and others. Violets are scarcer and are in demand. Roses sell rather slowly. Carnations go a little better. The Cut Flower Co. had some nice shipping orders for Enchantress and Prosperity. The additions to the list are Paper White narcissi at Niessen's and at Reid's and Easter lilies grown by Julius Koehler & Son, of Frankford. As seen at Joseph Kift & Son's handsome store, they were very fine. The subtraction from the list is cosmos. The last of the outdoor stock succumbed to Jack Frost.

The Largest Decoration.

The event of the week is unquestionably an elaborate store decoration arranged by Hugh Graham for Gimbel Brothers. It covers the main aisle on the second floor, which runs from Eighth street to Ninth street and is about thirty-five feet wide. Last year this decoration was the finest thing of its kind ever seen in this city. This year practically the same ground is covered. The changes are, however, very marked. The effect is much more artistic. Presumably Mr. Graham has been allowed to use his taste, with the result that the incongruous features supposedly popular are removed. The idea is a California garden. Cut chrysanthemums, cut roses, growing orchids and foliage plants predominate. There are four or five water effects and a tall rockery. The chrysanthemums are a show in themselves. The orchids, all from Logan, are a most creditable commercial collection. All the growing and much of the cut stock came from Mr. Graham's place at Logan, but some idea of the vast quantity used may be gathered when it is noted that the Leo Niessen Co. furnished 1,000 fine crysanthemums, E. Bernheimer 1,200 roses and so on.

A Visit to Riverton.

The chief was at home this time, fresh from a few weeks' trip across the ocean, taken on the slowest steamer, giving but little time on the other side. The effect was excellent. All signs of the strain of managing a big place had disappeared and there was abundant evidence of latent energy sufficient to meet every business problem that may arise.

It is rather a difficult matter to give an adequate idea of a large plant like that of the Henry A. Dreer Co., but when there is inspiration from a master in horticulture, like J. D. Eisele, with a little aid now and then from George A. Strohlein, it would be a mighty poor scribe who couldn't write something readable.

Mr. Eisele brought over with him some plants of an improved Paris daisy that he believes will be a very useful thing. It bears seventy-five per cent double or semi-double flowers of good size, resembling the anemone-flowered chrysanthemum Timbale d'Argent, well known in the eighties. The name of this daisy is Chrysanthemum furtescens Queen Alexandria. It will be sent out next spring.

Work on the perennials is now being pushed with vigor. Careful comparison has demonstrated the fact that pot plants of nearly all the perennials do better after being sent away than the larger, field-grown clumps. This is not generally believed yet, but it is true, the uninjured roots of the pot-grown stuff enabling them to push right ahead, while the clumps from the ground often have to be shipped just when their season of growth, or even of flower, is on and get a serious check. A larger force of men than ever before at this work is industriously potting these perennials. Long frames are full of thrifty looking stock now in 3-inch pots. They will be kept at it as long as the weather remains open, or until the job is finished.

Viola cucullata, the so-called crested pansy, is being more extensively grown. It is a feature of outdoor planting abroad, where it is massed in solid colors, blue, yellow and white, with perhaps a fine tuberous begonia to punctuate the beds which form a brilliant patch of bloom throughout the season.

Inside the houses Begonia Gloire de Lorraine in sixes, set on board strips over a lily tank, were very thrifty in appearance and full of buds. A corner of one house was devoted to nepenthes, pitcher plants, not often seen in commercial places. Mr. Eisele has brought over Croton Turnfordiense, considered the finest yellow-leaved variety with green edge. Cocos Weddeliana has been in good demand. A large stock is being marketed.

A very important cultural point at variance with accepted ideas has been brought out in Pandanus Sanderi. Mr. Eisele believes that with care this variety will be grown with the rich, vivid coloring throughout that makes it so effective. Nephrolepises are plentiful, nice bushy plants. For Scottii Mr. Eisele predicts a great future.

The azalea houses showed the effect of Mr. Strohlein's strenuous week spent in distributing them from Canada to the gulf and presumably from the Atlantic to the Pacific, though he did not admit it. There were great gaps in the blocks of glossy green plants.

The palms were in very fine condition. The decorative sizes of kentias, specimens six feet high and over in from 10-inch pots to 15-inch tubs, were a sight, their deep green foliage suggesting durability as well as perfect health. Latania Borbonica in 9-inch pots were nicely done. There were good looking tables of Areca lutescens in sixes and a few nice plants of Kentia Sanderiana. Outside in a slat house were a pretty lot of araucarias and in a board house were dwarf and standard bay trees. Both are somewhat novel. The dwarf bays are about two and a half feet high, prettily rounded, while the standards are trimmed in pyramid form, giving them quite an imperial air, as the Belgians say.

Train time and farewell to Messrs. Eisele and Strohlein came all too soon, but the memory of the pleasant visit will not soon fade away.

Easter Lilies.

In past seasons many of the Easter lilies used in this city have come from outside points, but during the coming winter Thaddeus N. Yates & Co. expect to have a steady supply, chiefly for cut flowers. They have upwards of 18,000 Lilium Harrisii 5x7-inch bulbs. The most advanced are likely to be in bloom by Thanksgiving. From that time a steadily increasing supply will be forthcoming until spring. The entire lot are in good, healthy condition and will average, Mr. Yates thinks, about three flowers to the stem. The firm is to be congratulated on their enterprise in this direction.

Various Notes.

The fall show of the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society opens next Tuesday, November 8, in Horticultural Hall, Broad street, below Locust street.

The board of directors of the Flower Market organized for the third year at the Market last Tuesday. The officers elected were: President, William K. Harris; vice-president, Joseph Heacock: secretary, Alfred Burton; treasurer, Charles E. Meehan. Mr. Meehan was also re-elected manager.

The Henry F. Michell Co. is busily filling bulb orders this week. They note an increased demand for narcissi and tulips for bedding. Their bulbs are being planted out in the beds at Independence Square this week.

Andrew E. Hall made up a handsome basket last week for the silver wedding of Mr. and Mrs. H. Bayersdorfer. The basket was large, of cornucopia shape and filled with silver-colored material throughout.

J. D. Eisele tried an old fashioned garden of hardy perennials last season with excellent results; an abundance of cut flowers for the table throughout summer and fall.

H. H. Battles has a show case on Chestnut street this week in addition to a case on Twelfth street, with fac-simile of his signature across the glass. The new case is evidently filled to interest the friends of the debutantes: Sunrise roses, lily of the valley and double violets, set off by Cibotium Schiedei fronds and pale green cover.

John Ruppert, of the Henry A. Dreer Co., has the sympathy of his many friends in the death of his father, which occurred last week.

The William Graham Co. has had a number of dinner decorations lately.

A fakir appeared in the center of business last Saturday with 100 fine, long-stemmed Liberties, fresh buds. He said he had bought them from a farmer. Another fakir appeared later with exactly the same stock and story. Wanted, the farmer.

Charles P. Poryzees had some exceptionally fine Bonnaffon in his window this week. Edward Reid pointed them out with pride.

Charles E. Meehan, the popular manager of the Flower Market, visited Wyndmoor recently. He reports crops promise well for the coming season. Beauties, of course, are the principal stock. Besides he mentioned John Burton's fine houses of Liberty and Myers & Samtman's house of Sunrise in splendid shape and their house of Queen of Edgely.

W. J. Baker is handling some heavy strings of smilax for which he finds ready demand.

A returned traveler says that many chrysanthemum shows are held in China during October. They divide the varieties into two classes, civil, corresponding to our Chinese, and military, corresponding to our Japanese.

Mr. Murdoch, of the Pittsburg firm of that name, was a visitor last week.

Samuel S. Pennock has filled some good gardenia orders lately. The supply of this flower is not so large as a week ago.

William J. Muth, of the Cut Flower Co., showed some good Colonel Appleton and J. K. Shaw chrysanthemums.

William Berger has an effective window display of chrysanthemums this week, grown on his own place. He has greatly improved the conservatory in the rear of his store during the past summer.

Brighthurst, exhibited by Nathan Smith & Son before the New York committee October 29, color rose pink, silvery reverse, Japanese, scored commercial scale 90 points; exhibition scale 85 points.

Mrs. John Fries, exhibited by John Fries, Covington, Ky., before the Cincinnati committee October 29, color Bonnaffon yellow, incurved Japanese, scored 86 points commercial scale. The flowers shown were grown two to one plant.

FRED H. LEMON, Secy.

LILIUM CANDIDUM.

The white lily is an old inhabitant of our gardens, so old in fact that no one could give a correct date of its introduction to England. The only thing to fix its date of introduction is to quote Gerard's Herbal of 1596. It probably first reached our shores from southern Europe, where it occurs in a wild state, extending from the island of Corsica to northern Persia and the Caucasus. Notwithstanding this bit of ancient history, the fact remains that modern cultivators have as much difficulty in cultivating the white lily as our ancestors had. Its mode of growth, and the time it commences to throw its leaves afresh, point to the fact that if necessary to transplant it, it should be done at a much earlier period than any other lily grown in the open. Experience would seem to indicate that it resents being lifted at all, while another difficulty is brought about by the advent of a fungus during the past few years. Taking all these things into consideration, we cannot help thinking that the white lily is happiest in the garden of the cottager, where the bulbs are seldom interfered with by the cultivator.—Gardeners' World.

SCRANTON, PA.—W. E. McClintock had a nice order recently for the Gearhart-Spencer wedding.

SANTA ROSA, CAL.—Master Finlow Geary has embarked in the florist business, growing outdoor chrysanthemums.

HILLSDALE, MICH.—Carl Hirsch gave a chrysanthemum show last week to which he charged adults 10 cents admission, dividing half his gross sales among the churches of the city. The result was that he had a big crowd and gave the churches $152.40. This week Mr. Hirsch visited Chicago on his way north for a few days' vacation.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

The close of last week saw a stiffer market than we have had at any time this season, largely because of the heavy requirements of the south, principally New Orleans, for All Saints' day. Of course the horse show helped to a degree, for social activity was at its height last week, but the southern shipping trade was ahead of the best previous records, calling for very large quantities of stock, and was the means of clearing the market. There are some houses doing a large shipping trade to other points which do not cater for New Orleans business; these sold out of all good stock to those who are willing to take the risks of heavy thousand-mile shipments.

Prices began to stiffen on Friday and on Saturday roses, and particularly carnations, commanded the best figures of the season, the advance being wholly unlooked for by the city buyers, who, many of them refused to buy beyond the necessities of the moment, believing that prices would be back to normal on Sunday and Monday. But in a way they were mistaken. Monday's receipts were small and it was Tuesday before the market was easy again; that day's business was light and receipts large.

There is no oversupply, yet a good crop of fine Beauties. Mildew is still in evidence on many tea roses and these are difficult to move at any price, even if crops are on the decrease and good stock somewhat scarcer than it was. Violets, especially Hudson river stock and singles, did well last week but are now in slow demand. There is a good call for valley, orchids and green goods.

Very fine mums are now offered in quantity, the season being about at its height. Eaton, Appleton and such big sorts are to be had without limit at comparatively moderate prices. The new pink, Wm. Duckham, has done well for everybody and will be largely grown next year.

There are large cuts of carnations and quality is in general very good. Quantities of outdoor flowers are still being offered cheap for funeral work. Paper Whites are in and callas are plentiful.

Club Meeting.

Election night at the club brought out the largest attendance in a year, among those present being Prof. A. C. Beal, of the University of Illinois, and Mr. Ellison, of St. Louis. The bowling trophies won at the S. A. F. convention were on display. The officers elected were as follows: President, W. N. Rudd; vice-president, J. P. Risch; recording secretary, Robert Johnstone; financial secretary, Geo. Asmus; treasurer, Edgar Sanders; trustees, F. F. Benthey, W. L. Palinsky, M. Barker, Leonard Kill and H. B. Howard. Five new names were proposed for membership, George Ball, Harry Blewitt, Jas. Hancock, Wm. Greisinger and R. J. Mohr, and one resignation accepted. For flower show premium funds, $50 was donated as usual. A certificate of merit was given a new light pink seedling rose raised by John Monson, of Minneapolis. Adjournment was to the Bismarck, where a Dutch lunch was given in honor of the bowling team.

Flower Show.

George Asmus was appointed manager of the flower show, his selection being a happy thought, for there is no more capable member of the craft. All arrangements are complete and a large number of exhibits assured, many responses having been received by the committee appointed to see what stock will be forthcoming. The only department which does not run smoothly is that of publicity, the political and war editors seeming to want to monopolize all the space in the daily papers.

Various Notes.

Miss Hartshorne, sister of James Hartshorne, is at the Growers' Market, selling the stock sent in by the Chicago Carnation Co. They have a bench of Wm. Duckham chrysanthemums which is a wonderful sight, and good old Bonnaffon is never grown better than they have it. The house of Fiancee is great and Mr. Hartshorne says they had cut three flowers to the plant at October 21, with plenty now in sight. Cardinal is making a fine showing, way ahead of others of its color. Lady Bountiful and Moonlight are both very good. Fair Maid is good but not equal to Enchantress. Two new ones on trial are a red seedling from W. N. Rudd, with good size and exceptionally long stems, and a yellow from A. Herrington which puts all other yellows among the "also rans."

Don't sprinkle the chrysanthemums after they have been packed in the boxes, and don't use wet paper. Many consignors do both these things, and it doesn't make them any money.

Joseph Smely, of Aurora, telephoned to town Sunday for entry blanks for the show. He said he wanted to enter the

J. D. Thompson sends us the following: "The J. D. Thompson Carnation Co. extends a cordial invitation to the members of the American Carnation Society, and all other visiting florists, to visit their establishment at Joliet, Ill., during the week that the society meets in Chicago in January, 1905. A special train will be in waiting and transportation will be furnished to those desiring to take the trip. The day and time of train will be announced later." To this Mr. Thompson adds that this invitation was placed in the hands of Secretary Herr at the S. A. F. convention at St. Louis.

A. M. Murdoch, of Pittsburg, is looking for the address of Charles Ussings, said to be employed by some Chicago florist.

E. H. Hunt is in receipt of a letter from the U. S. Department of Agriculture giving To-bak-ine a very fine endorsement.

The E. F. Winterson Co. was so busy with New Orleans shipments that they went out to the greenhouses Sunday to pack stock, the boxes being taken to Grand Crossing to meet the train.

John Assa, out in Bowmanville, has his place entirely in Brides and Maids, all carried-over stock, tied down and making fine growth. He has every promise of a very prosperous season. The stock goes to the A. L. Randall Co.

The George Wittbold Co. has been experimenting with Impatiens Sultani. They find it a good grower and very attractive, but it drops its flowers as soon as taken into a dwelling.

Robert Northam welcomed a little daughter a few days ago.

Sam Pearce has been cutting Paper Whites for a week, and several other growers are now in.

Weiland & Risch are cutting Brides and Maids to which they point with pride.

Vaughan & Sperry are getting some very long-stemmed Chatenays.

Kennicott Bros. Co. is handling considerable quantities of orchids, principally cattleyas.

The new drainage canal from Evanston to Chicago cuts through the farm Peter Reinberg bought a year or two ago, intending some day to build greenhouses there. Property owners in the vicinity, including Wm. A. Peterson, are trying to get the canal route changed. The present course ruins Mr. Reinberg's tract for greenhouse purposes.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

Business is now moving along at a very lively gait and the wholesale houses are selling out clean almost every day. All classes and kinds of stock are selling at advanced prices and things are looking very encouraging. That October was not up to last year is the general report, with but few exceptions, but now there is a chance for November to make up what was lost in October.

Great big exhibition mums are now on the market. Some of them bring $4 per dozen and $3 is a common price, with plenty of takers. The demand for all kinds and grades of mums is first class. Though the supply of small whites is fairly large, there are not enough to go around.

Roses are coming heavier than any other flower. Beauties are just about equal to the demand, with good stock advancing in price. Very good teas are to be had at $6. Every week the supply of carnations increases and in most cases the quality is right. But it is still impossible to fill all orders. Carnations have been very backward this year, but they will be coming in good numbers just when the mum is past its prime. Violets are now in good demand. Some very good valley is coming in, also narcissi, which are selling well.

in all their glory, thousands of them. Every color, size and form was represented, some of them seedlings, others importations. The new red rose, called Aetna, from all appearances is going to be a stayer. It shows more good qualities than any red rose I have ever seen, and has fewer faults. The plants were in fine shape. Carnations were also looking well. The Cardinal was doing nicely and throwing some long-stemmed flowers, which were fine.

At the B. K. & B. Floral Co.'s place we saw very fine carnations. There can be no question but that they are in charge of a good grower. The Queen was in great shape, showing a mass of buds on long, erect stems. Enchantress also was great and a large number of this variety are grown here. But Mr. Knopf's pet is Richmond Gem. It was coming along in fine shape and throwing many blooms. They also have some very good mums. Mr. Grave met us here, but owing to the shortness of our stay we were unable to visit his place, much to our regret.

WHITE FLY.

In reading the Review I see that there are many florists who are troubled with a small white fly. I have had the same trouble. It seems to thrive best where there are plenty of salvias, cinerarias and pelargoniums. I have found a very simple remedy. Take some fly paper and lay around the above named plants and on this place a few dried apples. They seem to relish these very much. All readers of the Review will do well to try the above and watch the results.

The Market.

Trade around town during the past week has been very slow and those who wished to put the best face possible on matters had to admit that it was very erratic. The wholesale men report shipping trade fairly good. Chrysanthemums have been rushed in and every market gardener who has any greenhouses usually has them filled with early mums, which come in at about this time and overstock the market. The best stock of large varieties has found fairly ready sale, but such varieties as Ivory, Pacific, etc., have been wholesaled during the week as low as $1 per hundred for fairly respectable stock. We expect, though, that next week this stock will be off the market and we hope the demand will be better when the elections are over. Roses are very plentiful, as is the regular occurrence at this time. Carnations, supply and demand about equal. Violets are of good quality and fairly plentiful. Bulbous stock is commencing to come in. Paper Whites and Roman hyacinths were brought in during the week in fairly large quantities and are finding ready sale.

Exhibition Plans.

Elaborate preparations are being made for the big fruit, flower and honey show to be held in Toronto November 15 to 19. This is being conducted on similar lines to what is known as the winter live stock show at Guelph, in which great interest is taken. This exhibition is being aided by the government, and it is expected, with the lectures and demonstrations that will be made, that it will be one of the most interesting and educational shows that has ever taken place in Canada. Anyone wishing special information should write to the secretary, H. B. Cowan, Parliament building, Toronto. D. J.

Marion, Ind.—Gunnar Teilmann is giving a flower show at his greenhouses these days. He is growing fifty-five varieties of chrysanthemums, only a few in any quantity, however.

A VIEW IN ONE CORNER OF THE FLOWER GROWERS' MARKET, 58-60 WABASH AVE., CHICAGO.

(ANOTHER VIEW WAS SHOWN LAST WEEK. ALSO SEE NEXT WEEK'S REVIEW.)

THE TENDENCY everywhere is for the buyers to seek to get into closest touch with the sources of supply and in the Chicago market the city buyers, who are constantly on the ground and in touch with the situation, go first each morning to the Flower Growers' Market, 58 to 60 Wabash Avenue, to supply their wants. Here on one floor they find set out for their convenient inspection more stock than is received in any other wholesale house in the West, including everything which is to be found anywhere else, and many things which are not to be had elsewhere; all stock reliably fresh, for everyone sells out clean each day at the prevailing market price. And, best of all, here they come into personal relations with the man who produces the goods, and find in him one who has learned that to do profitable business you must see that your customer, too, makes a profit from your goods. It being true that the Chicago buyers are best satisfied with buying at the Market, does it not follow that you, Mr. Out-of-Town Buyer, would find the growers at the Market your most dependable source of supply? Give any one on the floor your standing order and he has the whole resources of the Market to draw upon, and can meet all requirements as to quality and quantity as well for you as he can for the city buyers. And your interests will be his interests, you may rest assured of that. As a matter of fact, the growers represented at the Market are taking good care of a great many of out-of-town buyers whose patronage is so highly valued that, with every facility for so doing, new buyers will be afforded every consideration which has gained and held the older patrons. The Market can take good care of the largest order, but no order is too small to receive careful attention.

RADISHES.

Successional sowings of radishes should be made, according to demand. When a continuous supply is to be kept up a sowing will be necessary about every week or ten days, as that is about the length of time a crop will last from the time gathering commences. If the seed is sown thickly the time would be considerably extended, but the result would be a much inferior article. If maturing is delayed through crowding, soft, pithy, badly shaped radishes are invariably the result.

After making sure that the seed is good or ascertaining just what percentage can safely be depended on to germinate, the seed should be sown just thick enough so that every individual radish will have room to develop without being crowded. Sown thus the whole crop should mature within a week. Of course there will be a few small ones left but it does not pay to keep the bench waiting for them to mature. Better sacrifice them and put in another succession.

Before sowing again the soil should be forked over and well broken up and if green fly has made its appearance on the former crop, the surface of the soil had better get a liberal dusting of tobacco powder, which should be left over night to kill any of the pests that may be crawling around. When the soil is forked over next day the powder will necessarily be forked in, but it will not do any harm and will serve as a manure.

Radishes being a quick maturing crop, and what might be called a light feeder, it is unnecessary to have a heavy, rich soil for them. The lighter and freer the soil is the nicer and cleaner the product will be. A liberal supply of water is necessary, but this has to be regulated according to the lightness or retentiveness of the soil. Regarding temperature, I have found 45 degrees by night, with a rise of 15 degrees by day, the most suitable. A higher temperature will not facilitate matters much, but is sure to be productive of green fly and other insect pests.

Although I experimented with several varieties during the last season I found nothing better suited for forcing than the variety I recommended last year, Non Plus Ultra. This is a very dwarf topped, quick maturing variety, firm fleshed and well flavored.

W. S. Croydon.

TOMATOES.

Please tell us of a good soil compost for tomatoes. To what height do Eclipse, Stirling Castle and Sutton's Best of All grow if planted the first week in November? B. P. T.

In mixing our compost for tomatoes we use three loads of good fibrous sod to one load of partially decomposed manure. This is composted at least six months before being used, and is chopped up and thoroughly mixed just previous to using.

The varieties of tomatoes mentioned will grow to a height of eight feet or over if trained to a single stem and allowed to do so, but the tops can be pinched out and the plants restricted to any height desired over four feet. Under this height the plants would be too short to produce a profitable crop.

A TOUR AMONG CALIFORNIA SEED GROWERS.

Continuing our tour of inspection north from Arroyo Grande, the next point of interest is Gilroy. Here is located an extensive ranch of C. C. Morse & Co., who also have large interests at Santa Clara and "up the river." The test ground of this firm is carried out on a large scale. There is not a variety of lettuce but what is known to them by actual test. New varieties of sweet peas and special stocks of garden seeds from all parts of the world are tested by experts, and the difference, or no difference, as the case may be, in this stock or that stock is tabulated and recorded. Here the synonym is found and the variety classed. The proper information is handed out to any who are considered entitled to it, or kept in a sealed package for future reference.

The years of observation and experience of this firm place them at the front among California seed growers, and what is not known by them in relation to the business of seed growing in California is hard to find out. Their operations cover the whole field of the standard seeds as grown in California, and their inside label is thought to be as safe a guarantee of the contents of the bag as can be had.

Six miles south of Gilroy is Sargent, where Waldo Rohnert operates. This young man has been quite successful as a grower. Onion seed, lettuce, sweet peas, etc., are grown by him in large quantities and the opportunities for branching out are of the best. At the time of the writer's visit to his place he had in addition to his

Sargent ranch some plantings "up the river" from which he expected considerable.

The next point is Santa Clara, the home of all the pioneers in seed growing. San Jose, being only a suburb in importance, answers for a stopping place. The street cars connect the two. San Jose is the headquarters of the Braslan Seed Growers' Co.; that is one good reason it is on the map. It is a good place to put up at any way, and is a beautiful city.

W. J. Fosgate, who operates on the Stockton ranch, was the first grower visited at Santa Clara. He is what is termed a new grower, compared with the pioneers. He is making good progress, has every opportunity to push the business along and is coming to the front. He grows onion seed, lettuce, radish, etc.

J. M. Kimberlin & Co., whose title to "pioneer seed growers of California" is not disputed, do themselves credit. They have operated in the Santa Clara valley for twenty-five or more years and have seen the industry grow from a small beginning to its present huge proportions. They have been able to keep up with the procession and grow everything that the others do on quite a large scale.

The head office of C. C. Morse & Co. is at Santa Clara. In connection with their office they have a fine warehouse on the main street of the town and its appointments and facilities are right up to date. The original Morse ranch is located about a mile or so from their warehouse.

Chin ah Coon, a Chinaman, until within a year back was something of a factor in seed growing at Santa Clara. His operations were Americanized and his fields compared favorably with others in the locality. Now, it is said, he has gone back to China to enjoy the use of the money he acquired as a seed grower. As laborers, Chinamen have been important adjuncts to seed growing in California, and in this capacity they still cut a figure. It is noticeable, however, that the average Chinese laborer now on the seed ranch is getting old, and as recruits from the Celectial empire are barred from entry, the time will soon come when the Chinaman will no longer be available. This circumstance is regretted by many of the growers.

There are many other men and scenes of interest in the vicinity of Santa Clara. What some of the best known men in the seed growing industry are doing there will be told next week, for to include them all in this installment would make it far too long.

The past week has been a very active one in all kinds of seasonable bulbs. Roman hyacinths and Paper White narcissi are well cleaned up in the larger sizes. Double-nose Von Sion, crocus, and Lilium candidum are in short supply. The outlook for red clover seed is not assuring; prices tend upward in view of the short crop in this and other states. Foreign countries offer us no hope. Russia and Hungary are the largest producers of red clover seed among the European countries. Late reports from Russia are to the effect that there will not be over thirty-five per cent of a crop, and Hungary only fifteen per cent. Austria, Italy, France and Germany will not have over forty per cent of a yield. It is said that Great Britain will be a buyer to the extent of at least 15,000 tons, which in all probability will have to come from America. As to white clover, Europe has produced a good crop and prices are easier than earlier in the season. The crop of Turkestan alfalfa is small and not of good quality. The crop of alfalfa in European countries is said to be fully up to the average.

The situation on the beans is a trifle better this week. Threshing is well under way and deliveries from the farmers have begun to arrive at the cleaning warehouses.

The green picking in the Wisconsin woods has been retarded by much wet weather. The prospect is that the market will open strong, as the delay will make the buyers anxious.

SEEDS IN POLITICS.

The democrats are making a campaign issue of the government seed order, or, more specifically, of the last order put up under the old contract system. The following is from the New York World of October 4:

When Secretary of Agriculture James Wilson makes his campaign speeches in New York state during this month he may explain the free-seed distribution of 1902.
